SEC. 233. The Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development shall for Fiscal Year 2009 and thereafter, notify the public through the Federal Register and other means, as determined appropriate, of the issuance of a notice of the availability of assistance or notice of funding availability (NOFA) for any program or discretionary fund administered by the Secretary that is to be competitively awarded. SEC. 234. PREPAYMENT AND REFINANCING. (a) APPROVAL OF PREPAYMENT OF DEBT.—Upon request of the project sponsor of a project assisted with a loan under section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959 (as in effect before the enactment of the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act), for which the Secretary’s consent to prepayment is required, the Secretary shall approve the prepayment of any indebtedness to the Secretary relating to any remaining principal and interest under the loan as part of a prepayment plan under which—

- (1) the project sponsor agrees to operate the project until the maturity date of the original loan under terms at least as advantageous to existing and future tenants as the terms required by the original loan agreement or any project-based rental assistance payments contract under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (or any other project-based rental housing assistance programs of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, including the rent supplement program under section 101 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965 (12 U.S.C. 1701s)) or any successor project-based rental assistance program, except as provided by subsection (a)(2)(B); and

- (A) in a lower interest rate on the principal of the loan for the project and in reductions in debt service related to such loan; or
- (B) in the case of a project that is assisted with a loan under such section 202 carrying an interest rate of 6 percent or lower, a transaction under which

(i) the project owner shall address the physical needs of the project;

(ii) the prepayment plan for the transaction, including the refinancing, shall meet a cost benefit analysis, as established by the Secretary, that the benefit of the transaction outweighs the cost of the transaction including any increases in rent charged to unassisted tenants;

(iii) the overall cost for providing rental assistance under section 8 for the project (if any) is not increased, except, upon approval by the Secretary to—

(I) mark-up-to-market contracts pursuant to section 524(a)(3) of the Multifamily Assisted Housing Reform and Affordability Act (42 U.S.C. 1437f note), as such section is carried out by the Secretary for properties owned by nonprofit organizations; or

(iv) the project owner may charge tenants rent sufficient to meet debt service payments and operating cost requirements, as approved by the Secretary, if project-based rental assistance is not available or is insufficient for the debt service and operating cost of the project after refinancing. Such approval by the Secretary—

(I) shall be the basis for the owner to agree to terminate the project-based rental assistance contract that is insufficient for the debt service and operating cost of the project after refinancing; and

(II) shall be an eligibility event for the project for purposes of section 8(t) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(t));

(v) units to be occupied by tenants assisted under section 8(t) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(t)) shall, upon termination of the occupancy of such tenants, become eligible for project-based assistance under section 8(o)(13) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(o)(13)) without regard to the percentage limitations provided in such section; and counseling intermediaries approved by the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) (with match to be determined by the NRC based on affordability and the economic conditions of an area; a match also may be waived by the NRC based on the aforementioned conditions) to provide mortgage foreclosure mitigation assistance primarily to States and areas with high rates of defaults and foreclosures primarily in the subprime housing market to help eliminate the default and foreclosure of mortgages of owner-occupied single-family homes that are at risk of such foreclosure. Other than areas with high rates of defaults and foreclosures, grants may also be provided to approved counseling intermediaries based on a geographic analysis of the Nation by the NRC which determines where there is a prevalence of subprime mortgages that are risky and likely to fail, including any trends for mortgages that are likely to default and face foreclosure. A State Housing Finance Agency may also be eligible where the State Housing Finance Agency meets all the requirements under this paragraph. A HUD-approved counseling intermediary shall meet certain mortgage foreclosure mitigation assistance counseling requirements, as determined by the NRC, and shall be approved by HUD or the NRC as meeting these requirements.

No funds made available under this paragraph may be provided directly to lenders or homeowners to discharge outstanding mortgage balances or for any other direct debt reduction payments.

(3) The use of Mortgage Foreclosure Mitigation Assistance by approved counseling intermediaries and State Housing Finance Agencies shall involve a reasonable analysis of the borrower's financial situation, an evaluation of the current value of the property that is subject to the mortgage, counseling regarding the assumption of the mortgage by another non-Federal party, counseling regarding the possible purchase of the mortgage by a non-Federal third party, counseling and advice of all likely restructuring and refinancing strategies or the approval of a work-out strategy by all interested parties.

(4) NRC may provide up to 15 percent of the total funds under this paragraph to its own charter members with expertise in foreclosure prevention counseling, subject to a certification by the NRC that the procedures for selection do not consist of any procedures or activities that could be construed as an unacceptable conflict of interest or have the appearance of impropriety.

(5) HUD-approved counseling entities and State Housing Finance Agencies receiving funds under this paragraph shall have demonstrated experience in successfully working with financial institutions as well as borrowers facing default, delinquency and foreclosure as well as documented counseling capacity, outreach capacity, past successful performance and positive outcomes with documented counseling plans (including post mortgage foreclosure mitigation counseling), loan workout agreements and loan modification agreements. NRC may use other criteria to demonstrate capacity in underserved areas.

(6) Of the total amount made available under this paragraph, up to $5,000,000 may be made available to build the mortgage foreclosure and default mitigation counseling capacity of counseling intermediaries through NRC training courses with HUD-approved counseling intermediaries and their partners, except that private financial institutions that participate in NRC training shall pay market rates for such training.

(7) Of the total amount made available under this paragraph, up to 4 percent may be used for associated administrative expenses for the NRC to carry out activities provided under this section.

(8) Mortgage foreclosure mitigation assistance grants may include a budget for outreach and advertising, and training, as determined by the NRC.

(9) The NRC shall report bi-annually to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations as well as the Senate Banking Committee and House Financial Services Committee on its efforts to mitigate mortgage default. Such reports shall identify successful strategies and methods for preserving homeownership and the long-term affordability of at-risk mortgages and shall include recommended efforts that will or likely can assist in the success of this program as well as an analysis of any policy and procedures that failed to result in successful mortgage foreclosure mitigation. The report shall include an analysis of the details and use of any post mitigation counseling of assisted borrowers designed to ensure the continued long-term affordability of the mortgages which were the subject of the mortgage foreclosure mitigation assistance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) and the gentleman from California (Mr. LEWIS) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I think we’ve already debated this issue extensively. This bill is needed to fill in the gaps left in the existing budget for this year. It is the last of yesterday’s business so that we can move ahead to deal with the President’s expected new budget. I would urge support for the package.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, like many of my colleagues, I’m embarrassed by this omnibus spending bill and the process that created it. Even as the President talks about the need to put our economic house in order, this House continues to spend and spend and spend and spend. Clearly, the Congress has lost its way.

Not one of the nine spending bills in this omnibus was ever considered by the full committee. Six of the nine bills in this package were never considered by the full Appropriations Committee. One more time we’re spending hundreds of billions of dollars with no debate, no amendments, no Member input. Yes, clearly, this Congress has lost its way.

It’s now standard operating procedure that only a handful of Members in leadership are actually involved in writing significant legislation. This has been true with every supplemental spending package the House has considered over the last 2 years. This was true in the development of the $789 billion stimulus package passed by the House just 2 weeks ago. And, that is true once again today.

Under this rule just adopted, Members have 1 hour to debate $410 billion in spending, with no opportunity for amendments. That equates to nearly $7 billion for every minute of debate. Sadly, the vast majority of our Members will have no voice whatsoever in crafting this measure.

The fiscal year 2009 omnibus bill contains funding for nine of the 12 regular appropriations bills, a total of $410 billion. The new fiscal year began on October 1 and today, nearly 5 months later, we’re jamming the work that should have been done last year into one massive, last-minute, “take-it-or-leave-it” spending bill.

The spending in this legislation represents a $32 billion, or 8 percent increase over last year for the very same agencies and programs. With the exception of the spending boost after the September 11 attacks, this represents the largest annual Federal Government spending increase since 1978.

At the very time when our economy is forcing families to make do with less, Congress has embarked on the largest spending spree in our country’s history. When combined with the three appropriations bills that were signed into law in September, this enacted fiscal year 2009 budget will become our country’s very first trillion dollar discretionary budget.

It comes as no surprise that the $410 billion omnibus spending bill contains funding for many of the same government programs that received funding in the $789 billion stimulus package. Stimulus funding for these nine spending bills totals $270 billion. When added together, the combined fiscal year 2009 funding for government programs in both bills is $680 billion—an increase of $301 billion, or an 80 percent increase over just last year.

The real surprise is not the unfettered spending but the complete and utter failure of Congress to encourage any fiscal discipline whatsoever. At a time when American families are cutting unnecessary spending to weather the economic downturn, Congress should be doing the same thing. Instead, the premise of Pay-Go, or “pay as we go” is being replaced by the promise Go-Spend under this majority.

This delirious pace of government spending goes well beyond what most people would consider reasonable, let alone responsible. An 8 percent—or a $32 billion—increase in 1 year on top of the stimulus package is simply unnecessary and unsustainable. Balance is what we should strive for, providing enough money to allow the agencies to carry out their primary missions and to achieve real results. Our public has grown weary of Congress’ simply throwing money at every problem in this country. Spending fatigue has set in.

Mr. Speaker, as I commit to working constructively with DAVID OBEY this year, I encourage the majority leadership to pursue regular order that is inclusive of all Members so our work can once again reflect the bipartisan voices of this House.

I reserve the balance of my time.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and to insert tabular and extraneous material on H.R. 1105.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. OBEY. I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, for the last year and a half, this committee has been taking every reasonable action to ensure transparency in the earmarking process.

As an article in today’s Roll Call says, “The disclosure system implemented in the 110th Congress now allows for all of these Members’ earmarks to be located with a simple search of the online version of the bill, allowing for more transparency than ever.”

One aspect of the transparency process is to list the names of every Member requesting an earmark. It has come to our attention that a small number of earmarks with multiple sponsors inadvertently omitted some Members' names—a simple staff error. To ensure full and complete transparency, I am entering into the RECORD the additional names that should be attached to those requests. These are not new projects. We are simply adding additional Members' names who should be listed as sponsors or as cosponsors.

Mr. OBEY. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to my colleague from New Jersey (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN).

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this omnibus appropriations bill for many reasons, not the least of which is that this bill adds even more spending on top of the stimulus package that we just passed. As ranking member of the subcommittee on energy and water, I note that this bill contains just under $34 billion for similar accounts over and above those in the $800 billion stimulus.

However, I do commend our chairman, Mr. VISCLOSKY, for the open and participatory manner in which he develops all of our bills.

Overall, I am pleased about the energy and water portion of this package. The spending levels are fairly normal for energy and water development, and I know that the chairman has worked hard not to make any major policy decisions during the change in administrations. I am supportive of his approach with one exception: This has to do with the future of our nuclear power program.

Mr. Speaker, our national security demands that we develop a more balanced energy portfolio that reduces our dangerous addiction to oil. In years to come, we must have nuclear energy. No other technology provides such a clean source of baseload power. Over 20 percent of our Nation's energy supply comes from a nuclear source. The funding in this omnibus puts the future of American nuclear power in jeopardy. While some, including the current House and Senate leadership, may applaud this policy decision, I think it is a serious mistake.

This bill significantly cuts funding to Yucca Mountain, our future national depository for nuclear waste. It doesn't cut it all out because that would eliminate jobs and local funding support for the project that brings help to the State of Nevada. No. The omnibus keeps the project on basic life support, but this bill cuts enough so that the future of this project is in serious doubt, and it does so without proposing any other solutions for nuclear disposal.

Mr. Speaker, this seems the height of irresponsibility. I recognize the process that has led us to the floor of this House this afternoon will not allow us to have a real debate on the issue. For this and other reasons, I oppose this omnibus.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California for the time and ask consent to revise and extend my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to this omnibus appropriations bill for many reasons, not the least of which is that this measure adds even more spending atop a stimulus package we just passed.

I also want America to know what this bill will soon do to the children of Washington, DC.

In 2003, I worked with the current Minority Leader to establish a school voucher pilot program for the District of Columbia schools. Since that time, I have been proud to watch that program thrive. District school parents like the program because "they believe their children are in safe schools, they appreciate the small class sizes, rich curricula and positive change in their sons and daughters."

These are not my words. These are the words of the Washington Post in an editorial endorsing the DC school voucher program on January 26, 2008.

However, tucked deep inside this massive omnibus appropriations bill is a provision that terminates this common-sense program.

My colleagues, every child can learn if given the proper opportunity. This program gave children that opportunity. But no more! Parents will soon lose educational options for their families and children will once again be trapped in underperforming and failing public schools.

Mr. Speaker, this Congress and this President are about to fail the children of the District of Columbia.

America needs to know that and we should not be tucking this notion into the fine print of a massive $400 billion bill.

I also rise as ranking member of the Subcommittee on Energy and Water to note that this bill contains just under $34 billion for similar accounts above and beyond the $800 billion "stimulus."

However, I do commend our Chairman—Mr. VISCLOSKY—for the open and participatory manner in which he develops our bills.

Overall, I'm supportive of the Energy and Water portion of this package.

This bill contains another $9.8 billion for the Department's stewardship of our nuclear weapon stockpile. This responsibility is often overlooked with all the attention on energy issues, but this is really a core mandate of the Department.

There's roughly $6.5 billion appropriated for the Department's cleanup responsibilities. Another $6.5 billion is for the water projects of the Army Corps of Engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation.

Of the $33,795,000,000, over $10.7 billion is provided for the Department of Energy's science and energy R&D efforts.

The spending levels are fairly normal for energy and water development.

And I know that the Chairman worked hard not to make any major policy changes during the change in Administrations, and I'm supportive of his approach with one exception. This has to do with the future of our nuclear power program.

Mr. Speaker, our national security demands that we must develop a more balanced energy portfolio that reduces our dangerous addiction to imported petroleum.

In the years to come, we must tap the promise of nuclear energy. No other technology provides such a clean source of baseload power. Over 20% of our energy comes from nuclear power.

The funding in this Omnibus puts the future of American nuclear power in jeopardy. While some—including the current House and Senate leadership—may applaud this omission, I think it's a serious mistake.

This bill significantly cuts funding to Yucca Mountain—our future national depository for nuclear waste. It doesn't cut it all out, because that would eliminate the jobs and local funding support that the project brings to Nevada. No—the Omnibus keeps the project on "life support."

But this bill cuts enough so that the project is in serious doubt, and it does so without proposing any other solution for nuclear disposal.

Mr. Speaker, this seems the height of irresponsibility.

I recognize that the process that has led us to the floor of this House this afternoon will not allow us to have a real debate on this very real issue.

But we must have this debate because it is so critical to our economic and national security.

It's the type of issue that we were elected to solve.

I urge defeat of the bill.

Mr. OBEY. I continue to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to my colleague from Missouri (Mrs. EMERSON).

Mrs. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I come to the floor today to speak on the Financial Services and General Government section of the omnibus.

The bill includes $22.7 billion for this subcommittee, which is an increase of almost 10 percent above the fiscal year 2008 level. Nearly every account in the bill is funded at or above the budget request. If you will look closely at this $410 billion legislation, you will see most of the bill provides operational funding for government agencies, not program funding for grants or other services.

I am very concerned that this bill focuses on the Federal bureaucracy at the expense of the bricks-and-mortar projects we need to fund to spark our economy. Even within the areas of spending on infrastructure, I harbor concerns.

One example is the funding provided for the GSA. In the stimulus bill just passed by the House last week, GSA received $5.6 billion for the construction and alterations of Federal buildings. This bill provides GSA with another $1.4 billion for construction and alterations. In the last fiscal year, GSA only received a total of $1.4 billion for all of these activities. This year, they will receive a total of $7 billion.

We have all had experience with GSA projects in our districts. Does anyone really believe they have the contracting, program management, building engineering expertise to effectively manage $7 billion of new projects in 1 year?

I also note that the bill includes language prohibiting new District of Columbia students from eligibility for Opportunity Scholarships and stating that the program will be terminated after the 2009–2010 school year unless the authorization is extended. The Opportunity Scholarship Program provides close to 2,000 disadvantaged children the opportunity to attend private schools in the Nation's capital. All of these students who don't have the means to pay private tuition beyond the 2009–2010 school year will be forced out of the schools they and their parents have chosen. These children are from some of the poorest families in the District of Columbia. They have average incomes of approximately $23,000 per year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentlewoman has expired.

Mr. LEWIS of California. I yield to the gentlewoman an additional 30 seconds.

Mrs. EMERSON. Mayor Fenty and Chancellor Rhee are to be commended for their heroic reform efforts. However, the D.C. public school system is still the only place in the country where I, personally, support school vouchers. D.C. is still struggling to improve student achievement and to address school violence. Now isn't the time to limit academic choice for D.C.'s poorest families. I look forward to working with Chairman SERRANO during the coming year to ensure that the families in the District of Columbia have the academic opportunities they need.

Mr. OBEY. I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana (Mr. VISCLOSKEY).

Mr. VISCLOSKEY. I just want to respond very briefly to my colleague from New Jersey (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN), who is our ranking member.

I appreciate your kind words. Certainly, as we head forward to 2010, I look forward to the continued bipartisanship that we have enjoyed on the subcommittee both at a member and at a staff level.

I simply want to address Members of the House to share my concern with the ranking member about the final number relative to the Yucca Mountain depository as far as nuclear waste. I would point out that, in fiscal year 2008, $286 million was provided for that project. I would point out that the House mark for this project was $60 million higher. We were at $247 million. Unfortunately, a compromise was obviously involved here. The figure ultimately ended up at $145 million. I am not happy with it. The gentleman expressed his unhappiness.

Certainly, I want to continue to work—looking at all of these nuclear accounts and as a supporter of nuclear as part of the solution to our energy problem and climate problem—to make sure that this is not untoward as far as the continued progress of the industry. So I do appreciate and share the gentleman's concern.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. KINGSTON).

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, last year, the American taxpayer got on the hook for a whole series of bailouts to huge corporations and prop-ups for quasi-governmental organizations and hundreds of billions in stimulus programs. It reminds me of a layer cake, a seven-layer cake.

When I was growing up in Athens, Georgia, I went to Alps Road Elementary School. On the way home every day, when I would walk home, I would pass the Beachwood Bakery. Sometimes they'd put a big layer cake in the front window. A layer cake was so cool because it would have chocolate and then a layer of vanilla and a layer of almond cake, and it was all this delicious stuff, but it was interesting because one was stacked on top of the other. That's what we're seeing in the Pelosi deficit Congress:

Last year, a $29 billion for Bear Stearns bailout in March; $168 billion in May for a bailout; $200 billion in July for Fannie Mae; $700 billion in October; $85 billion for AIG in September; then this year, $790 billion for a stimulus package. Well, you would think that some of that would be coordinated with last year's appropriations bill which we're about to pass, but instead, it is all layered, just like that cake.

If you look at this bill, there is a 13 percent increase for agriculture spending, 11 percent for congressional spending, 13 percent for transportation, and 11 percent for Commerce, State and Justice. Now, that sounds okay. It's a little bit out of whack with what the American family is going through, so that's bad. Then when you realize that this is not coordinated with the stimulus bill of $790 billion, which we just passed, if you look at that, then agriculture is actually up 45 percent; Commerce, State and Justice are up 41 percent; labor 91 percent; transportation 139 percent.

Overall, these accounts in these seven appropriations bills have gone up 80 percent when combined with the stimulus package, and the stimulus package in these areas is not something that is going to be hardcore job creation. There is not enough public works to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEWIS of California. I yield to the gentleman an additional 30 seconds.

Mr. KINGSTON. So here we are at a time when American families are worried about being laid off. They have seen their retirement accounts shrink to nothing. Many have been laid off. Many have had foreclosures. It is time for Congress to tighten its belt. Yet, with the passage of this bill and of last week's bill, we're looking at an 80 percent increase in these particular areas of the budget.

I believe the proper vote today is to vote "no." Send this back to committee. Actually let Republican members look at the bill, and try to redraft something that is better. Let's work together for a better piece of legislation.

Mr. OBEY. I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO).

Mr. SERRANO. Just for clarification to the gentlewoman (Mrs. EMERSON), the D.C. School Vouchers Program will remain in effect. It has been funded this year for $14 million. It remains in effect until June of 2010. It will then be up to the authorizing committee to speak to our committee as to what they want to do. It will also be up to the D.C. Government to tell us if they wish to continue the program. The program stays in effect until next June, and I think that will give us ample time to find out how everyone feels about the continuation of the program.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank Chairman OBEY for yielding time so I can comment on the Financial Services and General Government portion of this bill. I'd also like to thank him for the hard work he has put into bringing this bill to the floor.

The Financial Services and General Government section of this bill provides important funding to ensure that the Federal Government is more responsive to the needs of the people, and increases resources to ensure the agencies under this section have increased resources to perform important oversight roles over the operation of our banks and of Wall Street.

The bill provides $22.7 billion in discretionary appropriations for programs within the Department of the Treasury, the Executive Office of the President, the Federal Judiciary, the District of Columbia, the General Services Administration, the Small Business Administration, and several smaller agencies. This bill directs funding to programs in these agencies where we believe money will be well spent and will benefit, for example, disadvantaged communities and small businesses.

The bill also directs funding toward agencies that have important roles in our efforts to promote economic recovery. The American Recovery and Reinvestment Act included nearly $6.9 billion for agencies in the Financial Services bill, including the Treasury Department, the General Services Administration, and the Small Business Administration. The bill we are considering today will provide these agencies with funding to enable them to fully implement important recovery activities, such as support to small businesses and making our Federal buildings and vehicles more energy efficient.

I also want to highlight briefly four important themes in the Financial Services bill—financial sector oversight, consumer protection, small business development, and election administration improvements.

With respect to financial sector oversight, the bill provides funding increases over last year's level and the previous administration's requests for Treasury's Departmental Offices, information systems, and Inspector General. While this bill doesn't directly fund the Troubled Asset Relief Program, or TARP, it funds the Office of the Secretary and other executive leadership offices at Treasury that have central responsibility in making policy decisions on TARP. These funds will help ensure that the remaining TARP money will be distributed in an open and fair manner.

Mr. Speaker, I also want the House to know that we have increased the budget for the Securities and Exchange Commission. This bill includes a $37 million increase over the FY 2008 level, and is above the funding recommendations of both the House and Senate Appropriations Committees. This is just a down payment toward restoring the ability of the SEC to vigorously oversee the financial markets, enforce securities law, and protect investors.

If I might take a moment to look ahead, this subcommittee will be taking a hard look at those agencies that failed in their duty to protect our economy. Although they are under new leadership now, we will have important questions for them in how they conducted themselves, and what resources and changes are needed to ensure such a crisis does not occur again in the future.

Regarding consumer protection, the Consumer Product Safety Commission would receive $25.4 million above the FY 2008 level. These extra funds will be used to continue the effort we started in the last Congress to restore the Commission's ability to keep unsafe products, including unsafe imported products, out of the marketplace. Money is also available in the bill for the Commission to improve the safety of pools and spas to prevent tragedies involving child drowning.

Consumer protection is also important with respect to financial products such as mortgages and consumer loans. My subcommittee held a hearing last year that examined the problems relating to the subprime mortgage market and what the Treasury Department and the Federal Trade Commission could do to address this situation. Treasury's Community Development Financial Institutions Fund, which will receive $107 million in this bill, or $78.4 million above the previous administration's request, helps to expand the availability of credit, capital and financial services to underserved communities throughout the nation, including those particularly hard hit by the credit crisis. The Federal Trade Commission will also receive increased funding for investigation and enforcement in the financial services area, including subprime lending investigations.

This bill also does a great deal to support small businesses by including $612 million for the Small Business Administration. This includes $110 million for Small Business Development Centers, which is $13 million over the FY 2008 level. We also provide $22.5 million for microloans and technical assistance to the smallest companies.

In addition, the bill funds SBA programs that target disadvantaged and low-income communities and entrepreneurs, including the HUBZone program, the PRIME program, and the 7(j) program.

The fourth important theme is improving election administration. The Election Assistance Commission is a small agency that works on issues that are extraordinarily essential to the Nation and to voters' confidence that their votes are counted accurately. This bill includes $100 million for payments to States to help them meet the requirements of the Help America Vote Act of 2002, as well as additional funding for research and testing of voting systems. This funding will help ensure that elections are fair, accessible, and accurate.

Mr. Speaker, the Financial Services section of this bill also includes a number of policy provisions that will address some ongoing congressional concerns.

It includes, for example, a moratorium on new competitive sourcing—also known as A-76—activities. The provision halts the previous administration's controversial and detrimental Federal workforce program so that the new Administration can consider and implement its own workforce policies.

The bill also contains a provision to prohibit funds from being used in support of the IRS private debt collection program. Under this very misguided and wasteful program, the IRS allows private contractors to collect unpaid taxes and to keep up to 24 percent of the tax revenue they bring in. This program should be terminated, and the prohibition on funds will help ensure that the IRS better redirects their resources elsewhere.

The Financial Services section also includes provisions to liberalize travel to Cuba for Americans who have family members living in that nation. There is no reason to place any restrictions on those who simply wish to visit their families that are still in Cuba. In addition, the bill contains provisions to facilitate trade with Cuba relating to agricultural and medical product sales.

This section of the bill also encourages our Federal Government to address an important Federal worker benefit issue that has already been successfully dealt with by about 10,000 private sector employers, including more than half of the Fortune 500 companies. We have included report language that clearly states that, "OPM should consider taking steps to extend health care benefits to Federal employees' domestic partners." It is past time for our Federal Government to take a lead in providing this important employee benefit.

Mr. Speaker, the Financial Services provisions of this bill include many important funding and policy choices that will improve the services our government agencies provide to our constituents as they pay taxes, purchase products, vote in elections, and start small businesses. I urge a yes vote on this bill.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. MCCLINTOCK).

Mr. MCCLINTOCK. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, when it was announced that Randolph Churchill had been hospitalized to remove a benign growth, a rival commented, "What a pity it is to remove the only part of Randolph that isn't malignant."

When I look at this bill, I can only remark what a pity it is to remove the only part of the Federal education system that actually works. Hidden in this mess is a provision that effectively destroys the Washington, D.C. Opportunity Scholarship Program. For the last 5 years, these vouchers have provided thousands of low-income children with the means for their parents to make the very same choice that our First Family has made for its children.

The Washington Post, which is hardly a paragon of conservatism, summed it up this way in its editorial today:

"Many of the Democrats have never liked vouchers, and it seems they won't let fairness or the interests of low-income minority children stand in the way of their politics. But it also seems they're too ashamed—and with good reason—to admit to what they're doing."

Mr. Speaker, this bill represents the biggest expansion of discretionary spending since the Carter administration, but it can't even continue the one successful education program in the entire Federal Government.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my time.

Mr. LEWIS of California. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, I don't remember a time in the years that I've been in Congress that I've used a chart. I hope you can see this, but I can't see it very well.

Charts are interesting things. The most interesting part of them is that the numbers change all the time. But I thought it would be very appropriate to follow on to the comments that Mr. KINGSTON had made.

This package before us is a reflection of what has to be the worst possible year for the Congress in terms of their willingness to just throw the people's money at almost any problem around as though that is the solution.

I've described this as the first—hopefully the only—trillion dollar-plus discretionary budget in the history of the Congress. Indeed, in every category of spending—the 08 year, the 09 year, adding on to it the omnibus package, the $800 billion package that just passed—we have radically increased and adjusted that which will be going on in government not just in the fiscal year ahead of us, but setting a new stage for spending that I believe could lead to destroying the dollar as we know it.

If you just look at these categories. Here's in the area that has to do with energy and water. In that package, we have approximately—if I can read this thing properly—$30.9 billion in 08. In the 09 year, combined with the omnibus, that package goes up to $77.6 billion. That is a 151-percent increase in spending in this category of national funding, 08 to 09.

Most outrageous is the subcommittee that is chaired by the chairman of our full committee, my colleague and friend from beautiful downtown Wisconsin. In the 08 fiscal year, the Labor, Health and Human Services bill spent $144.8 billion. That's not trillion or million. It's billion dollars.

When you combine both the 09 spending year with the omnibus, the total in these categories of spending runs to $276.6 billion; a 91 percent increase over the 08 year. Think about that. A 91 percent increase in the largest discretionary package in all of our spending outside of national defense. Absolutely, it's clear to anybody who could think about it.

We're raising the bar, the foundation point for spending across the board in the Federal Government; and as we do so, we put pressure on spending across the board every year subsequent to the 09 year.

So year in, year out, we're going to be breaking the bank by way of additional spending.

If the public is concerned about its Federal Government—especially the tax-paying public who are legitimately working for a living—if they're worried about it, they will take a look at this chart. We'll be glad to make it available. It's time that we got a handle on just throwing money or mud at the wall—taxpayers' money, if you will.

This trillion-dollar package is a reflection of the Congress not doing its work. I come to the well with this chart simply to urge everybody who is listening to recognize that it's time that we send a message to the people's House: Enough is enough. We've got to get a handle on this or we're going to destroy our economy.

Indeed, the Appropriations Committee has stopped doing its work by way of regular order, that is, having hearings in the subcommittee, hearings in the full committee, coming here and having open rules. Instead, we're passing trillion-dollar packages with no input from the Members of the people's House, thereby no input for the citizens out there who pay our bill in the first place.

With that, Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, I strongly urge a "no" vote on this package and urge you to help us make sense out of the way the system is working.

Mr. Speaker, may I ask how much time there is on both sides.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California has 12½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Wisconsin has 27 minutes remaining.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana (Mr. VISCLOSKEY).

Mr. VISCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the recognition, and because the energy and water portion of the omnibus package was mentioned, I would point out to my colleagues that we know how to say "no," to say "no" for the right reason: for policy, as well as to save the taxpayers of this country money.

The previous administration asked for $205 million to expand the Strategic Petroleum Reserve. That would essentially, at a time of high gas prices, put the Federal Government in competition with the consumer. That was a bad idea. The subcommittee and full committee said "no," and we have saved the taxpayers $205 million in this bill.

The previous administration asked for moneys for the so-called Global Nuclear Energy Partnership Act. That was zeroed out in this bill. There were not huge, vast sums of money involved, but there were taxpayers' dollars that were saved and particularly in the out years because we did not go down that road.

The previous administration wanted to proceed as far as the examination of a reliable replacement warhead absent a new nuclear strategy post-Cold War. It was not a good idea. We eliminated that money, and we saved the taxpayers of this Nation a great sum of money.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York (Mr. LEE).

Mr. LEE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose this spending bill, and I do so in the same Chamber as last night the President spoke on an issue of fiscal responsibility.

But now this Congress is about to pass another major spending bill, and when you look at the numbers, it's simply an embarrassment. This is on the heels of the largest spending bill in the United States' history being passed less than 2 weeks ago. This thousand-page bill is $410 billion; nearly 9,500 earmarks—or almost 25 per Member of Congress. The largest 1-year increase in discretionary spending since the Carter administration. On top of that, this bill doubles up on spending in many areas already allocated through the stimulus package.

The one number I keep coming back to is $11.5 trillion dollars. That's how high the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office says the budget deficit will rise over the next decade under the spending programs enacted by this Congress. That's nearly 3½ times the cumulative budget deficit for the previous administration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEWIS of California. I yield the gentleman an additional 30 seconds.

Mr. LEE of New York. More of the same irresponsible spending will not engineer western New York's economy from recovery or create jobs over the long term. Mortgaging our children's future will only drive us deeper into this ditch.

It's time to change the course here in Washington. Washington has to start doing more with less.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I continue to reserve my time.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. PENCE).

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the Omnibus Appropriations Act for fiscal year 2009. During these challenging economic times, American families and small businesses every day are making sacrifices to make ends meet, and this Congress should be doing the same.

With all of the talk about fiscal responsibility in this Chamber last night and across Capitol Hill, it is time for our Democratic colleagues to put our money where their mouth is. Republicans are willing to come together and work across the aisle and make the hard choices necessary to put our fiscal house in order. But today, instead of doing that, we're passing one more massive government spending bill.

The Republicans believe Congress, instead, should immediately freeze all Federal spending at existing levels. No 8 percent increase in the Federal budget that's included in this bill. No earmarks. Let's just do what every American family is doing right now. Let's find the savings, let's hold the line on expenses, and let's make it through these difficult times.

The $410 billion spending bill that we're considering today that the majority has brought to the floor includes billions in wasteful spending, thousands of pork-barrel projects, and an 8 percent increase in funding for government programs. It's the largest increase in discretionary spending since the years of the Carter administration, with the sole exception of the days following 9/11. The largest increase in discretionary spending in a single year since the time I was in high school.

And there's provisions in this bill that undermine historic pro-life safeguards enshrined in our long-standing policy and law: $500 million for family planning organizations, language that guts the Kemp-Kasten provision preventing funding going to organizations that support coercive abortion and forced sterilization, and reduction of funding for community-based abstinence.

And it's earmarking as usual in this bill. There's $1 million to research the red snapper in Florida, $1.9 million for the Pleasure Beach Water Taxi project in Connecticut, and $2 million for promoting astronomy in Hawaii. I ask, Mr. Speaker, are these projects really necessary in these challenging economic times?

House Republicans and millions of Americans are saying enough is enough. Let's do what every American family, what every small business and family farmer is doing in these difficult times: let's hold the line on spending. Let's set aside this massive new omnibus spending bill, and let's pass immediately a spending freeze and begin the process of putting our house in order.

Let's say "no" to an 8 percent increase in federal spending, "no" to 9,000 earmarks, and let's say "yes" to fiscal discipline and reform, and let's say "yes" to an immediate freeze on all Federal spending.

This Congress should do no less and make no less sacrifice than every other American family is making in these difficult days.

I urge a "no" vote on the omnibus spending bill.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. OLIVER).

Mr. OLVER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I think I heard the immediate previous speaker say that we should freeze all expenditure at the 08 level. Well, speaker after speaker from the other side of the aisle have said—from what they've said it would seem to me they are in complete denial, utter denial, of where we are and why we got here.

The fact that we have had a recession. We've been in a recession for at least, now, into the fifth quarter. All of that being in the budget year of 08, fiscal 08, and then part of 09 when we did part of our budget under the previous President.

We, in that period of time, have ended up losing more than 3 million jobs in the 08 calendar year. We're still going to lose more jobs. We're still in recession, clearly in recession. And we have also been suffering from a foreclosure crisis where we've lost more than 3 million homes to foreclosure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OBEY. I yield an additional minute.

Mr. OLVER. What that totals to is of course there is more expenditure when you are talking about trying to get out of a recession and a foreclosure crisis—which every economist, reputable economist, at least, that we've heard from on either side of the aisle says that the kind of recovery package that we have passed only 2 weeks ago was important to be able to put a bottom under this recession, under the foreclosure crisis, and such. The foreclosure crisis caused by total lack of any kind of regulation of the financial industry has occurred under their watch.

So here we are, we have a recovery package which actually does increase the expenditure over what would be the normal expenditure in a given year. Our regular budget that we're passing is only the regular budget. The stimulus package is above that, and it needs to be above that. And they've got to stop being in denial of how we got there and why we're having to do this.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. MCHENRY).

Mr. MCHENRY. I thank the ranking member for yielding. And I thank you for the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to be here today and to talk about this important measure on the House floor.

Our President came before us last night and called for a new foundation of lasting prosperity. And I agree, that's what we must have in these tough economic times. We have to come together and work across party lines to make that happen. Unfortunately, the spending bill on the House floor today goes in the opposite direction. There is nothing new about this foundation that they're offering, and there is nothing lasting in terms of prosperity that will be produced from this legislation.

This is the largest increase in government spending since President Jimmy Carter and the malaise days of the 1970s. It was the wrong approach then and it is the wrong approach now. I think we need to work together to find a real solution.

President Obama called last night for us to make the hard choices to bring down the debt. Well, if that's the case, there were no hard choices in this legislation before us today because it doesn't bring down the debt—in fact, it increases it at a rapid pace.

In the last 3 weeks, this Congress will have passed almost $1.5 trillion worth of spending. It's dangerous. It's dangerous because it will lead to high inflation, it's dangerous because it crowds out private capital, it's dangerous because it hurts our long-term prosperity and our hopes for the future.

The American people deserve better. And that's why I encourage my colleagues to vote against this legislation. America can do better, and the American people deserve much better than this wild-eyed spending bill we have before us today.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut.

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, with this bill today we are fulfilling our responsibility as representatives of the people to fund critical programs and to invest in a framework for job creation.

We all know why we are here. The previous administration refused to compromise and work toward a sensible approach. While advocating for billions upon billions of dollars to save Wall Street, the Bush administration blocked every new penny for Main Street, critical dollars for energy research, health care, education, law enforcement and biomedical research. We have rejected those devastating cuts, and so today we have a final package that will keep the government running and finish last year's business.

It should also be clear that this bill works in harmony with the economic recovery package, making investments that address the country's immediate needs while investing in our long-term economic strength.

While Republicans express outrage on the floor of this House, the fact is that this bill is a product of bipartisan, bicameral negotiations. Every funding decision in this funding bill was made with Republican staff in the room and with their collaboration.

This bill represents a real commitment to getting our economy back on track, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire as to the time remaining on each side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California has 6 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Wisconsin has 23 minutes remaining.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER).

Mr. BOEHNER. Let me thank my colleague from California for yielding.

And I think all of my colleagues know that American families and small businesses are struggling, they're tightening their belt. And what are we doing here? We're bringing nine appropriation bills to the floor all wrapped into one big bill, 8 percent over the amount spent last year, including some 9,000 earmarks. I just think this is out of control.

This is exactly what the American people want us to change. And after spending all kinds of unnecessary money in the so-called "stimulus" bill, now we see these big increases in the bill before us. And that's why my Republican colleagues and I suggested that we ought to have a spending freeze. Let's just freeze spending for these agencies at last year's level. But our request for an amendment to have such a debate and vote was denied, and so here we are in a position of having to oppose this bill.

One of the more hideous provisions in this bill is the effort to eliminate the District of Columbia Scholarship Program. Back when I was chairman of the Education and Workforce Committee, I worked on a bipartisan basis to help establish this program, and in the agreement that was reached, provided additional money to D.C. schools for IDEA and for title 1 in exchange for a $15 million program to help our poorest students here in the District of Columbia who are trapped in some of the worst schools.

Now, this program has helped thousands of students here in the District of Columbia. I was at a school on Monday that has students there who receive money from the D.C. Scholarship Program. Their parents are engaged in their schools, their parents like their schools, and the kids are doing well. And yet, because this provision was never debated in committee, it was never debated in subcommittee, and we didn't see it until 2 days ago and somehow it showed up in this bill, would seek to make clear that the end of this program is going to occur at the end of this school year.

Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, most of you know that I have a real passion for making sure that all kids in America have a chance at a decent education. None of us would be here if we had not had a chance at a decent education. And we know some of the worst schools in America are actually right here in the District of Columbia. And for those parents who have taken advantage of this program and allowed their children to go to real schools, schools where they're cared for, schools where they get an education, to suggest that we ought to eliminate this program is an abomination. I am adamantly opposed to this provision and opposed to this bill, and would urge my colleagues to send a loud and clear message that we should vote "no."

The President campaigned against this type of legislation, this number of earmarks. And I would hope that the President would veto this bill because Republicans in Congress will be here to uphold his veto of this piece of legislation.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Florida.

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. I thank the gentleman.

I rise in support of this important piece of legislation and suggest that our good friends on the other side of the aisle are either suffering from some state of amnesia or maybe stuck in an alternative universe because it's pretty clear that the American people are suffering, that we are living through the worst economic crisis in almost any of our lifetimes. I don't know that there's anybody who is a Member of this Congress today that lived through the Great Depression, but there is an unprecedented crisis that the spending and appropriations in this legislation will help address beyond the important recovery legislation that we passed last week.

It is critical that we invest in the quality of public education, that we make sure that children and the frail elderly have the services that they need, that we make sure that we rebuild our infrastructure, and that we make sure that we make an important and historic commitment to improving the quality of life of all Americans. That's what this legislation will do, and I am proud to support it.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. CULBERSON).

Mr. CULBERSON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

And I, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, take a great deal of pride in our work. I know that at this time of financial crisis, the Nation needs to have confidence that the United States Congress is doing its job thoughtfully and deliberatively in a way that is transparent and open and responsive to the American taxpayers. But to have that confidence in our work, we have simply got to be open and transparent.

And I know that Chairman OBEY is a believer in the committee process. I know Chairman OBEY in his heart wants to do all that he can to open up this process and make sure that taxpayers see and hear and participate in the drafting of this important legislation. But yet this bill before us, this $400 billion spending package, is in so many ways representative of the process followed by the leadership of the Congress. The $800 billion stimulus bill, which was posted on the Internet only 13 hours before the vote, the public cannot have any confidence in our work if they can't see and hear and know what we're doing. And transparency today in the age of social media is so important.

I cannot support this bill because we, as a public, have not been given a right to see it, to participate in its drafting; the committee process was not followed as it should have been, and it is spending money we do not have. Never before in history have so few spent so much money in so little time; over $1.3 trillion has been spent by this new Congress in 26 legislative days. We have, in one stroke, in this very short span of time, more than doubled the annual spending levels of the United States Government with virtually no transparency, no input from the public.

The American people have been shut out from the committee process. The deepest, darkest hole in America is the House floor under this new leadership, and it's just wrong. It's not right. Let's let the sun shine in. Let the public in. Let the taxpayers see how their money is being spent. That will give the public more confidence in the process and give us, as the minority, a greater ability to support where we can.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. VISCLOSKEY. I appreciate the gentleman yielding, and just a moment ago mentioned a number of programs that did not have merit, which we said no to. On the other hand, looking at the energy situation we face in the United States, it is an economic, a national security, and an environmental issue, and we do need to make an investment.

New technology drives new jobs, markets, and economic opportunity, which is why we set $4.8 billion aside for the sciences in the Office of Science.

It is a national security issue, energy is, given where we buy so much of our petroleum products from, which is why we decided to invest in new vehicle technology to the extent of $273 million so we can get more miles per gallon, setting aside the issue of Yucca, investing $792 million in nuclear energy, and doing extensive biomass research.

There is an environmental aspect to this as well, and that is why we set aside monies for advanced clean energy and technologies to reduce the impact of older fossil-based fuels.

And finally, I would point out, given national security, we have set aside $1.5 billion for nuclear nonproliferation programs.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself so much time as I might consume.

Mr. Speaker, it's a very unusual circumstance for me to do this, but adressing my colleague, the chairman of the full committee, personally, let me say that you've heard a lot from me about the fact that I am disconcerted about the way we got here, but nonetheless, this omnibus process has been a long and difficult one in development. And you are to be congratulated for the effort you put into this not only recently, but much of last year, and I have every respect for that effort.

But having said that, I was joined by all of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle who were in attendance at the President's address last evening. President Obama demonstrated to all of us, as well as the public, his immense capability as a public communicator. In many, many ways he said exactly the kinds of things we need to be discussing with each other if we're going to get America back on track.

President Obama urged all of us to reach out in as much bipartisanship, nonpartisanship as possible to make sure that we stimulate our economy, create jobs, leading America to a new opportunity in the years ahead. Following that, I would have hoped that the work of the House would reflect that very spirit; but, indeed, I mentioned earlier the omnibus package of some $800 billion that was just passed a couple of weeks ago, a bill that went forward with very, very little Member input, virtually no subcommittee work within the Appropriations Committee, a single hearing within the full committee, coming to the floor with no significant possibility of amendment, and yet we were literally one more time throwing the people's money in suggestion that we would solve problems that way. That was just 2 weeks ago.

And then we came to the President's address just last night. And here we are, the day after that, spending another $410 billion by way of this omnibus package that absolutely is a reflection of the worst of the way the House ought to be working.

When we take nine bills from last year, put it in a single package, having no serious Member input, no subcommittee work, almost no Member of the House having an opportunity to provide amendments, et cetera, it is the worst reflection of the way this House ought to be working. Indeed, if we continue on this pathway, we won't just in the first couple of months of this session be spending $1½ trillion of the public's money; we will be setting the stage for undermining our economy for the years to come. I'm afraid unless the public gets the message clearly enough that they send a clear voice by way of their communication with their membership, we won't change this pattern. And, indeed, the destiny of the country will be dramatically affected by such misdirection.

I urge the Members to express their view regarding this by way of voting “no” on the package before us.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Speaker, division B of the bill before the House today includes appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Justice, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the National Science Foundation, and other independent and related agencies for fiscal year 2009.

At the outset, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the former ranking member of this subcommittee, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, who I think is on the floor here this afternoon, for his contribution to this title. Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN leaves the subcommittee this year to become the ranking member of the Energy and Water Subcommittee. Over the past 2 years, we have worked cooperatively together, and I’m very much appreciative of his recommendations in crafting this portion of the bill and the bipartisan approach he brings to his work generally. While it is with disappointment that he leaves our subcommittee, we are equally pleased to welcome Congressman FRANK WOLF back to the subcommittee. Once its chairman, Congressman WOLF returns again this year as our ranking member in the 111th Congress. He too has a reputation for bipartisanship and the passion he brings to his work. I am pleased to welcome him and look forward to working with.

Division B of the bill provides nearly $57.7 billion for programs of the Justice and Commerce Departments, NASA, NSF, and those related agencies. This level is an increase of $5.8 billion over comparable fiscal year 2008 levels. Programs funded within this division of the bill touch and enrich the lives of every American in many varied ways. Whether assisting the poor with legal representation; combating crime; and deterring terrorism and the scourge of drugs; improving and protecting our Nation’s oceans, waters, and natural habitats; or enabling new discoveries in science here in our Nation’s laboratories on Earth or in its heavens that lead to improvements in our health, this bill covers a broad swath. Mr. Speaker, it is important to note that passage of this bill provides basic operating components of all of those agencies and does it well.

In closing, let me acknowledge the work of the staff. They have put in long hours to get us here. My thanks to the staff’s director, John Blazey, for his outstanding performance leading an excellent staff. Diana Simpson, Adrienne Simonson, Tracey LaTurner, and Scott Sammis have each brought their considerable talents and dedication to the task of producing this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, in particular let me recognize the contributions of Marjorie Duske. A new appropriations structure providing discrete appropriations for the salaries, expenses, and management of the Department of Justice’s State and local law enforcement programs shall be a testament to her commitment to detail, program analysis, and tenacity. Marjorie worked for the House of Representatives for nearly 18 years, the last 2 of which were on the Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, Science. Marjorie is not here with us today as she has left the committee to begin a new opportunity in the upper body, and in a way returning a bit closer to her home, she now serves the senior Senator from Minnesota. In any event we on the committee wish her Godspeed and thank her for her service to the body.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I really hate to take the time, but I do think in light of all that’s been said that one last time I need to put in context what it is we’re doing with this bill.

As I indicated earlier, last year we finished our international bills, but we reached an impasse with then President Bush because the President insisted that he would only sign appropriation bills that fit within his budget recommendations. Those budget recommendations were some $20 billion short of what the Congress determined when it passed the budget resolution that we needed to provide for those programs. If we had simply acquiesced in President Bush’s programs, we would have cut the Job Corps, we would have eliminated Employment Service grants, we would have cut senior jobs by $172 million, we would have eliminated vocational education programs, we would have eliminated three student aid programs including the Perkins loan program, we would have funded the highway infrastructure at $800 million below the level guaranteed in the authorization, we would have cut airport modernization grants by 22 percent, we would have eliminated Community Service Block Grants, and we would have cut Low Income Home Energy Assistance by $570 million, and we would have cut health care access programs by $1 billion. As I said many times on this floor, I have never had anybody come up to me at home and say, “Obey, why don’t you guys in Congress get your act together and cut cancer research?” And yet that’s what the previous President and the previous Republican-controlled Congress did over a 2-year period. They cut over 900 medical research grants out of the National Institutes for Health. We objected to that and said, no, we didn’t think that ought to happen.

So we then offered the President a compromise. I called the White House budget office, and I said, look, why don’t we at least just split the difference between these bills so we can get something done on the domestic side of the ledger? They said no. At that point we had a choice. We could acquiesce in these reductions or we could say, no, we’re going to bet on the outcome of the election. We did. Mr. Obama won. We now have a White House which is firm in its beliefs but also one that recognizes that people have to compromise to get things done.

This is now a compromise package brought to the House. This has been worked out at the staff level between Republicans and Democrats alike in both the Senate and the House. And the Senate minority leader, Senator MCCONNELL, while I suspect he will vote against this package, urged us to take it up 3 weeks ago because he indicated it had been fully vetted by both sides, by both parties, and he said in his estimate he thought it would pass with an overwhelming vote. We shall see.

But I want to explain two other things about this bill, what this bill really does. And it’s been suggested that this bill is not at all coordinated with the stimulus package we passed last week. Absolutely false. This omnibus bill does two things: It provides base funding for the programs funded in the Recovery Act without which those additional recovery funds would not be useful. Example: the Social Security Administration. While the Recovery Act provides $1 billion to the Social Security Administration to replace its computer center and to process increased disability retirement requests, this bill provides $10.5 billion for Social Security operating budgets. It doesn’t do any good to have a computer center if you don’t have an operating budget. This bill provides the other half of the funding that’s needed to make our promises on Pell grants to students around the country a reality.

The recovery bill in the area of highways provided $27.5 billion for additional highway construction. This bill provides $40.7 billion to improve and repair our Nation’s aging highway infrastructure. The recovery bill was built with this package in mind.

The second thing this bill does is to provide basic funding for all kinds of programs that were not increased by the recovery package. Three-quarters of the accounts in the Federal Government did not receive an additional dime in that recovery package. This bill takes care of the base funding for those programs.

Now, we hear some concerns expressed from the other side of the aisle about the number of earmarks in the bill. Give me a break. The last time that our party controlled the House of Representatives, we had, for instance, in the Labor-Health-Education appropriation bill, depending upon how you define them, either zero earmarks or nine. When the Republicans lost control of the Congress, they were providing over three thousand earmarks in that subcommittee bill. That's the story, I mean as a practical matter. The other side didn't just let the cat out of the bag when it came to earmarks; they let out the whole blessed zoo. So now we have tried to reform that process, at the same time being respectful for Congress's right to determine how funding is directed in the budget. So we have a good many earmarks in this bill. Those earmarks represent congressional decisions about where dollars ought to be spent.

I would point out virtually every agency Secretary has far more in discretionary funds than the Congress has to distribute in earmarks. In fact, virtually every dollar in Secretary discretionary funds is nothing but funds that are reserved for administration earmarks or the functional equivalent thereof.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBEY. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LEWIS of California. The point that the chairman is making is a very, very important point. We do have a constitutional responsibility to spend the people's money by way of appropriations. Over the years there has been a tendency to concede all of that authority to an administration, Democrat or Republican, and people get up here and harangue about our exercising that constitutional charge that we have. The chairman is making a very important point. Years and years ago, literally every subcommittee chairman, as the chairman said earlier, pretty much dictated what went on in the whole budget. There was very little individual Member input. And the administration had an exchange over time. We ceded so much of our authority, it is very much a time for us to begin to reconsider this recent history, and I appreciate the point the chairman is making.

Mr. OBEY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make one other point. We have heard a lot of concern expressed today on the other side of the aisle about the deficits that are being mounted by this bill in conjunction with the stimulus bill. Let me point out I have heard seven different times Members on that side of the aisle refer to the fact that this is a $400 billion bill. It is not. It is a $410 billion bill. But $390 billion of that represents requests on the part of the Bush administration. So let's keep that in perspective.

Secondly, I really don't want to have to take lectures from those who supported the idea that we should borrow $1.2 trillion in order to provide tax cuts over the past years, the lion's share of tax cuts going to the very wealthiest people in this society. I don't want to hear lectures from people who essentially provided what will eventually be $2 trillion in costs for the Iraqi war.

A number of us tried to assure that at least half of the money that we provided to Iraq in economic aid would be in the form of loans, because Iraq has a lot of oil and sooner or later is going to be a rich country and we wanted to see the American taxpayers reimbursed for some of the costs of building schools, building roads and all the rest in Iraq. No, we couldn't get the votes to do that.

But now we face a serious problem in our own country, not in Iraq, but in our own country. And so, yes, in combination of this bill with the stimulus package, or the recovery package, as it's known, there is an awful lot of money being spent. I make no apology for that, because we are trying to fill what is going to be a $3 trillion hole in the economy because of the rising unemployment numbers.

I want to use this chart for what I hope will be the last time. This chart demonstrates what is likely to happen in the economy if we do nothing. The red bars indicate what estimates are in the economic community, what estimates are of what will happen to unemployment rates if we do nothing. These red bars indicate that by the end of next year, the economics profession largely expects us to have unemployment around 11 percent, perhaps even higher. The blue bars represent what we hope will happen if the government passes a $750 billion economic recovery package.

As you can see, unemployment, even under that scenario, is expected to rise through the remainder of this year before it begins to turn down next year. What we have tried to do is simply shave off the worst, most extreme effects of this recession. That's what we have tried to do with the stimulus package.

So what we have really had here today is a regurgitation of the debate that occurred 2 weeks ago on that stimulus package. But the fact is that if you take that stimulus package and add it to this package today, you are still only talking about a package of $1.2 trillion to counter what is supposed to be a $3 trillion hole. I would submit that it is very easy to imagine that we will, in fact, be back here asking for even more by way of countercyclical funding to counter the deep slide that we see in our recession.

Poll after poll demonstrates that you have close to 70 percent of the American people who agree with what President Obama is trying to do in passing the package to produce this moderating effect on what will otherwise be the most serious recession since the thirties.

So I make no apology for the fact that instead of providing billions of dollars for economic recovery in Iraq, we are not trying to provide a good amount of money to provide economic recovery here at home. I thought that's what our job was, to primarily concentrate on the needs on the home front.

I would point out one other thing in closing. For all of us who have talked and told our constituents that at a time of extreme economic distress at home, Members of Congress should not be getting a pay raise next year, if you want to assure that that, in fact, happens and that we deny that pay raise for the coming year, then you must vote "yes" on this bill, because without this bill you do not have the limiting language that was inserted in this bill by the rule that was passed earlier today.

With that, I would urge an "aye" vote.

Mr. REYES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 1105, the FY 2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act.

I support this omnibus package because it rejects the harmful cuts that former President Bush insisted on in his budget. Instead, this bill provides and restores critical funding in areas such as energy research, healthcare, education, law enforcement, and biomedical research. As a proponent of the recently enacted economic recovery bill, I support this omnibus because its passage is necessary in order to allow the stimulus plan to work.

In light of our nation's current economic downturn, I am pleased that Members of Congress will not receive an automatic cost-of-living increase scheduled for FY2010. In these difficult economic times, Members should forgo a cost-of-living increase.

Last night, in his address to a Joint Session of Congress, President Obama emphasized his commitment to create or save 3.5 million new jobs in this country. The omnibus bill addresses this pledge by providing $3.6 billion for job training programs. I believe that job training is critical to help workers receive the necessary skills training they need to move into higher paying jobs and provide for their families.

But that is not all. In terms of education, I am particularly pleased that the omnibus bill takes a comprehensive approach to education. The bill provides $7.1 billion for Head Start; $15.8 billion for Title-I programs serving the most disadvantaged students in our country; and a much needed $19.2 billion for federal student financial aid programs like the Pell Grant. These funding levels complement President Obama's ambitious goal to tackle our nation's drop out rate and have America lead the world by the year 2020 with the largest proportion of college graduates.

In my district alone, 20,179 students receive Pell Grants which provide students with resources to offset the rising costs of tuition. By ensuring funding for these types of investments, we are opening the doors of opportunity for all our children.

I have worked closely with my colleagues to find ways to curtail the violence in Mexico and support our southern neighbor. I am pleased that this omnibus bill provides $405 million for counter-narcotics and law enforcement programs through the Merida Initiative. With violence surging in Mexico, President Obama has made clear that we will stand with Mexico as the government combats the illicit drug and weapons trade, and the Merida Initiative is a critical component of this strategic partnership.

In keeping with the aim of the recovery plan, we must continue to reinvest in our transportation infrastructure which has been neglected for years. As we transition to a system with a greater focus on energy-efficiency, the omnibus reaffirms our commitment to bolstering our nation's transit systems. The Federal Transit Administration will receive funds through this omnibus appropriations bill for grants for new buses, stations, intermodal facilities, and technology improvements. I know my district in Texas will greatly benefit from additional funds to make our transit system more efficient and accessible. Our existing national highway systems will also continue to be critical, so I am pleased to know funding has been included to improve and repair our nation's aging highway infrastructure.

Recognizing that the current recession will persist, President Obama has asked Congress to help our fellow Americans weather these tough economic times. Housing authorities and non-profits that provide housing assistance across this nation will likely experience a greater demand for their services this year. Significant funding in this omnibus is dedicated to ensuring low-income families and the most vulnerable members of our communities have access to safe, affordable housing. For the remainder of the current fiscal year, both the Public Housing Capital Fund and the Public Housing Operating Fund will receive funding increases so that public housing authorities can make critical repairs and improvements to their housing units, improve living conditions for their residents, and keep up with maintenance and energy costs. During this recession, meeting the housing needs of our low-income, elderly and disabled community members is critical, and I am glad to see just over $1 billion in grants will be available to rehabilitate, buy, and build affordable and safe housing.

The omnibus also increases funding for Section 8 vouchers to continue helping over 3 million low-income families and individuals as well as provide 14,000 new, targeted vouchers for the disabled and homeless veterans during this housing crisis. An additional $75 million will be used for 10,000 housing vouchers for homeless veterans, and $1.7 billion will also be made available in the form of grants so communities can provide housing and services for other homeless individuals.

Last night, President Obama made it clear that we will take on health care reform this year. We have already made great strides in expanding health care coverage for our nation's children through the reauthorization of the Children's Health Insurance Program. Through the recovery plan, we have taken an important first step in cutting costs by investing in electronic medical records as well as research into diseases and preventative care. This omnibus appropriation continues these investments by providing the National Institutes of Health with critical funding to research diseases such as Alzheimer's, cancer, and diabetes. Because prevention is increasingly being recognized as essential to curbing costs, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention will receive $6.6 billion for public health programs at the federal, state, and local levels. Community health centers, like those in El Paso, will be able to provide services for an additional 470,000 uninsured people with the $2.2 billion provided through this bill. We also provide funds to state high risk insurance pools so they can help people who cannot obtain health insurance in the commercial market because they are medically high risk. With the $496 million provided for childhood immunization, approximately 15,000 additional children will receive the vaccinations they need.

However, all these worthy programs will need the support of a well-trained base of providers. In addition to the investment in training medical professionals included in the recovery plan, $171 million in the omnibus will go to support nurse education programs and $222 million will support the Health Professions Training program to train doctors and other professionals. This funding will go a long way not only in ensuring access to services but also quality care.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this omnibus bill because it will address our nation's immediate needs as well as invest in our long term economic strength.

Mrs. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, last night, President Obama repeatedly expressed a desire to pass fiscally responsible legislation, his fear of passing a mountain of debt to future generations, and his intention to greatly reduce the federal deficit.

All sentiments with which I couldn't agree more.

However, only two weeks after passing a $1.1-trillion economic "stimulus" package and a week after presenting a $275-billion plan to address less than 8% of American mortgages, Washington Democrats today are bringing to the floor an appropriations bill that represents the largest discretionary spending increase, aside from legislation after the 9/11 terrorist attacks, since the Carter Administration.

If we look back on the last 19 months, you'll find that the U.S. government has pledged more than $11.6 trillion on behalf of American taxpayers to dig our nation out of the recession—and that doesn't even include the $410 billion we are about to spend in this latest spending bill.

Where is the fiscal responsibility?

Even more incredulous is the fact that this omnibus appropriations bill contains funding for many of the same agencies and programs that already received funds in the so-called "stimulus" bill—162 programs in fact. For instance, it provides $2.9 billion for the 2010 census even though $1 billion was already allocated for this project in the "stimulus" package. We also have funding for the National Endowment for the Arts, which, fresh off receiving $50 million from the "stimulus," is now in line to receive $138 million in this latest proposal.

The combined fiscal year 2009 funding for these "double-dipping" programs is $680 billion—a whopping 80% increase in spending.

Furthermore, the Democrat majority is once again using a massive spending bill to shove sweeping national policy changes through Congress without public scrutiny and without proper debate. This bill contains language to terminate the District of Columbia's successful school voucher program; it eliminates the "Reading First" program within the Department of Education; and it drastically undercuts construction and design funding for Yucca Mountain, a key component to any plan that puts America on the path to energy independence. The merit of these programs aside, a sweeping spending bill—especially one with no opportunity to amend—is not the appropriate place for any of these measures to be considered.

Enough is enough. The American taxpayer is already struggling in this weakened economy and it is time Congress started to show respect to the American people and stop increasing the weight of their financial burdens. The spending spree has to stop now.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, today, the House is considering H.R. 1105, the Fiscal Year 2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act. This legislation will complete the fiscal year 2009 appropriations process and keep our federal government operating through the end of the fiscal year. Taken as a whole, passing H.R. 1105 is good for our country. It invests in rural priorities, like agricultural and rural development programs, while simultaneously fostering the health, education, and safety of the American people.

While I will support H.R. 1105, I am deeply disappointed that the measure includes a provision added by the Senate to authorize a $25 million study to review the original project purposes of the Missouri River as set forth by Congress, by the Missouri River Master Manual, and by the federal courts. In my view, authorizing and appropriating funds for a new Missouri River study is unwarranted.

Mrs. LOWEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 1105, the Consolidated Appropriations Act and specifically Division H, the State and Foreign Operations section.

Despite unprecedented domestic challenges, the United States cannot afford to pull back on our commitments to critical national security and development initiatives abroad. This bill provides the Administration with funds to begin rebuilding our diplomatic and development capacity, restore American leadership and meet critical needs by providing: $7.1 billion for global health programs, including $5.5 billion for global HIV/AIDS, TB and malaria programs; $1.3 billion to address humanitarian emergencies worldwide, including in Gaza; $1.5 billion to continue basic education, safe water and environment initiatives around the world; $4.4 billion in assistance to vital allies in the Middle East, including funding for Israel and Egypt at levels agreed to in MOUs between the United States and those countries and $498 million for Jordan; $1.8 billion to help secure and stabilize Afghanistan and Pakistan; $1 billion to fund counternarcotics, law enforcement and economic development in Latin America; $1.36 billion in economic and security assistance for Africa as well as $3.9 billion to fight HIV/AIDS and meet other health needs; and $6.1 billion to hire, train, and protect an estimated 500 additional diplomats at the State Department and 300 new staff at USAID, and while continuing the existing law banning the use of U.S. government funds for the provision of abortions, it funds the UN Population Fund, a vital partner in health programs around the world.

I would like to thank our staff for their tireless work. This bill will provide President Obama and Secretary Clinton with key resources to protect America and improve the lives of millions around the world.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. speaker, today I rise in strong support of H.R. 1105, The Omnibus Appropriations Act of 2009. This important legislation stands as a marker stone on the path to a sustainable and just economic future. With its passage today, we leave behind the bloated budgets of the past, under which the fiscally fortunate and the manufacturers of unnecessary Cold War weapons disproportionately benefited. With this bill we refocus our priorities with key investments in education, energy, health, and housing. At the same time, we also set the stage for future budgets, in which this Congress and our new President will recommit to pursuing policy priorities that will remake our nation as a society that values an environmentally sustainable economy, social justice, and opportunity for all.

The most critical and wise series of investments made in this bill are in the area of improving access to health care. As this recession deepens, Americans nationwide are losing their healthcare due to no fault of their own. In the 31 days between December 2008 and January 2009, an average of 14,000 people per day lost their health care insurance. This legislation will help mitigate this drop in health security by providing $2.2 billion to community health clinics, $496 million will be appropriated for vaccinations for children, and an added $15 million above FY 2008 funding will be added to train nurses.

Mr. Speaker, this new Congress understands that we must invest in human capital—our children—if we hope to sustain the economic recovery we are embarking upon. H.R. 1105 will ensure that 900,000 children have access to high quality preschool services by appropriating $15 billion for Title I grants to low-income children. The bill will also make college more affordable by expanding Pell grants to $4,360 per year.

Working in concert with the President's foreclosure mitigation program and my cram-down bankruptcy reform, H.R. 1105 will also offer solutions to our housing crisis. It will provide an additional 1.3 million low-income families Section 8 vouchers. Moreover, $765 million will be appropriated to buy, rehabilitate and build housing for low-income and elderly Americans. Lastly, $3.9 billion is allocated for Community Development Block Grants which will fund vital local activities such as creating affordable housing, supporting anti-poverty programs, and "right-sizing" cities like Detroit through vacant housing demolition.

During these tough economic times we must resist the temptation to forget the cataclysmic threat posed by global climate change. This omnibus bill keeps us on the path to planetary stability with a $375 million investment dedicated to promoting solar energy and housing stock weatherization. To better understand the science behind this crisis and keep our research up to date, this bill also includes a $755 million increase from Fiscal Year 2008 for climate change related scientific research.

Lastly, $765 million will be used to develop energy generation and storage such as fusion energy and advanced batteries, so that we can move technology from the test lab to the product floor.

Tomorrow, the President will propose a budget for fiscal year 2010 that will move the debate on many of the policies embodied in this legislation to the next level. Instead of merely covering the serious problems our nation faces with band-aid solutions, we will begin to consider end-game legislation that will eventually lead to a world where health care and global warming no longer threaten our families and our way of life. I stand ready to support these efforts, acknowledging that enacting lasting change will be a momentous task, but also knowing that it is necessary and achievable.

But that is tomorrow. Today we act to lessen the pain of the moment—to ease the uncertainty that comes with the opening of a paycheck or the arrival of a hospital bill. I encourage my colleagues to support this bill so that we can begin to move this country towards fiscal recovery.

Mr. ROGERS of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I rise in reluctant opposition to this bill. While I'm very grateful for the funding items included for my district—items that combat rampant drug abuse, clean up our waterways, and promote economic development for the citizens of southern and eastern Kentucky—I am compelled to evaluate the whole bill before casting my vote.

Because of the runaway and wasteful spending items, continued abuse of the appropriations process for political ends, and misguided policy riders, I cannot compromise my core values, and must oppose this legislation.

First, fiscal discipline. There is no evidence of it here. It was just two weeks ago that this body passed a bloated, trillion-dollar stimulus bill—a wrong-headed piece of legislation that was much more of a down payment on a radical, left-leaning agenda, than the true jolt our struggling economy actually needed.

The omnibus legislation before us today is simply the second act, funding many of the same wasteful programs as before, with no accountability, and represents the largest single increase in domestic spending in 30 years. We are putting our children and grandchildren at perilous risk—borrowing money we don't have, and plunging our country even further into debt. It is not sustainable in the long term, and I fear our actions will only worsen the economic situation our country currently faces.

Secondly, this bill was crafted in secrecy, out of public sight, and five months behind schedule. The bills being considered today, totaling over $410 billion dollars, have never even been considered on the floor of this body until today. They have been crafted and negotiated by staff under the direction of the Speaker of the House without the involvement of the vast majority of Members of Congress. No amendments, virtually no debate, and no public scrutiny. This process has been more dictatorial than legislative, with the Speaker holding the megaphone.

And finally, this bill is littered with questionable policy riders that are an affront to the conservative principles and family values many of us hold dear. Most alarming to me is the assault on the rights of the unborn—the most vulnerable citizens of our society; $545 million is designated for foreign "family planning" clinics, ensuring that overseas abortions will be performed with U.S. taxpayer dollars for the first time in nearly a decade. Even more egregious, the bill reverses long-standing policy, and actually allows U.S. funds to flow to foreign organizations that support coercive abortions and involuntary sterilizations. These provisions, combined with drastic cuts in abstinence education, seem designed to promote an "abortion first" policy in this country, and I cannot stand idly by and in good conscience vote for a piece of legislation that does that.

Mr. Speaker, it didn't need to be this way. There was ample opportunity for bipartisanship and enacting sound fiscal policies throughout this process. Instead, we have another flawed bill, crafted under a cloak of darkness.

This body is capable of far better, and I urge Members to oppose this bill.

Mr. POSEY. Mr. Speaker, the Omnibus Appropriations bill before us today provides an 8 percent increase for dozens of federal agencies and departments. These tens of billions of dollars in additional spending are in addition to hundreds of billions of dollars just signed into law by the President last week as a part of the "stimulus" bill. Taken together, this amounts to nearly an 80 percent increase in funding for many of the agencies funded in the Omnibus Appropriations bill. Put another way, spending for these agencies will increase from $378 billion in 2008 to nearly $680 billion in 2009. And, all of this increase is "paid for" with borrowed money that our children and grandchildren will have to repay. This amounts to generational theft.

Simply put, the American worker isn't getting an 8 percent pay increase each year much less an 80 percent pay increase, and they cannot afford to pay for such expansive government spending.

Are there good provisions in this bill? Yes. Are the objectionable provisions in this bill? Yes. Sadly, no Member of Congress was permitted to offer an amendment to this bill, much less a sufficient amount of time to actually read the bill. The House leadership, which sets the rules of debate, has prohibited any Member of Congress from offering a single amendment. No member of Congress is permitted to rise and ask that even one of the more than 8,000 earmarks in this bill be stricken from the bill.

In just the past four weeks, this Congress has approved over one and one-half trillion dollars in new spending—most of it borrowed money. Sadly, not a single amendment has been permitted to be offered. The Congress is broken and the American people deserve better. We will never get this nation back on track if this Congress continues to consider and approve only legislation written in back rooms at the last minute by only a handful of leaders in the majority. That's not what the American people elected us to do. It is long past due that the legislative process be allowed to work and that all Members of this Congress be afforded the opportunity to truly represent their constituents. True bipartisanship means allowing input from both sides not simply take or leave it dictates.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, today, the House can complete its work on the fiscal year 2009 appropriations bills. The omnibus bill we bring to the floor today is the result of collaboration between Democrats and Republicans, and today, my colleagues on both sides of the aisle can vote to fund some of America's most important priorities.

We are at this point today because President Bush's last budget ignored critical investments in our country's future. It shortchanged our military families; it shortchanged police departments across America; it shortchanged our schools and teachers by $3.3 billion; and it shortchanged American workers by cutting job training and worker protections—an especially irresponsible step in a deep recession that was already underway when that budget was submitted.

This bill corrects those oversights. This is legislation designed to confront an economic crisis and geared to mesh with the job-creating recovery legislation we passed this month. It funds worthy programs including research on energy technology and efficiency; investments in healthcare access and K–12 education; new training for Americans who have lost their jobs; and more.

Mr. Speaker, it would be shameful if the families and public servants and scientists and workers on the other side of this bill are shortchanged because of a phony pet issue—a pet issue like earmarks. Railing against earmarks may be a popular partisan crusade here in Washington—but I challenge any Member of this House to go to his or her district and ask the people there if the issue of earmarks is more important than a good-paying job, more important than quality schools, more important than safe communities.

The truth is that it's Democrats, not Republicans, who have reformed the earmark process. We imposed strict accountability and disclosure rules on ourselves—so that the public can see how every dime is spent. We cut earmarks by more than 40 percent last year, and we've cut them again this year. In this bill, we have taken them down to less than 1 percent of the budget. But if someone wants to stand in the way of better schools and healthcare and jobs because they have a problem with less than 1 percent—they can be my guest, and then they can explain it to their voters.

The truth is that getting our fiscal house in order—after years of Republican neglect—is not about earmarks at all. It is going to take hard decisions and hard work. It's the work that began when President Obama called a fiscal responsibility summit at the White House, and when he spoke to us last night in this chamber, as an adult speaking to adults. That is the hard work our country demands, work without partisanship or posturing. And for that job, everyone in this chamber is needed, and welcome.

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support H.R. 1105, the FY2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act. The $410 billion omnibus bill encompasses nine separate appropriations measures that stalled last year when the Bush administration insisted on preserving severe cuts to health care, education, law enforcement, and other programs contained in its FY 2009 budget proposal. I'm happy that under the Obama administration, we will keep the government running and finish last year's business.

While there are many critical provisions in this legislation, I want to highlight a few issues that are especially important to me and the people of the 14th Congressional District of New York.

The FY2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act includes $277.7 million in federal funding for the Second Avenue Subway and $209.6 million for East Side Access. One of my top priorities since I was first elected to Congress, the Second Avenue Subway will run from 125th Street to lower Manhattan. It will offer a much-needed alternative for commuters and will reach underserved neighborhoods on the East Side. East Side Access will bring the Long Island Rail Road to Grand Central Terminal, carrying approximately 163,000 average weekday boardings.

The bill also contains $70 million in new funding for federal 9/11 health programs. The new funding, combined with $112 million carried over from previous years, would cover the World Trade Center Health Programs' $182 million estimated cost for FY 2009. I thank Mr. OBEY for including this funding to provide much-needed health care for WTC community members and first responders both in New York and across the country.

I am pleased that the legislation also provides a total of $545 million for international family programs—an increase of more than $80 million from the 2008 level. Included in this total is $50 million for the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) and its work to improve reproductive health, raise the status of women and improve the quality, safety and availability of contraceptives in nearly 150 countries.

Additionally, I want to thank Chairman OBEY and the committee for including $151,000,000, the fully authorized amount, for the Debbie Smith DNA Backlog Grant Program. I believe that "The Debbie Smith Act" is one of the most important anti-crime bills that has ever passed Congress and been signed into law. Today we take another step forward in preventing violence against women by supporting a program that helps to put rapists in prison.

Finally, the bill includes a no-cost, common sense solution that will reduce unintended pregnancies by reinstating access to low-cost birth control at college health centers and safety net providers. Since January 2007, more than 3 million college students and hundreds of thousands of low-income women have lost access to affordable birth control because of a provision in the 2005 Deficit Reduction act which—by all accounts—unintentionally cut off every college and university health center and hundreds of safety-net providers from access to low-cost drugs. The no-cost fix included in this bill will correct this mistake and restore affordable birth control to these populations.

In closing, I want to note that this legislation will work in harmony with the economic recovery package that President Obama has already signed into law by making investments that address the country's immediate needs while investing in our long term economic strength. I'm pleased to support H.R. 1105, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Omnibus Appropriations Act.

The legislation before us today invests in key priorities for our country from energy to education, and will help address critical needs that were ignored under the previous Administration.

In addition to the other important work that this Omnibus Appropriations Act will do alongside the Recovery Act to make our economy stronger, I want to call special attention to the work this legislation will do to respond to the serious drought that we face in California.

The bill before us today provides significant funding for the federal water reclamation and reuse program administered by the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation. That program, known as Title XVI, helps local water managers to treat wastewater and use the clean water that results for commercial irrigation and industrial processes. Under Title XVI, the federal investment in water recycling is matched many times over by monies from state and local agencies, so it's not only environmentally sustainable, it's cost-effective.

The Title XVI funding in today's bill builds on the historic investment in the program that was contained in the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act. I am hopeful that this important program will continue to thrive under President Obama and Secretary Salazar.

In the San Francisco Bay Area, including in Pittsburg in my congressional district, water managers have put together a regional planning effort to invest in water recycling infrastructure. This bill bolsters that regional cooperative effort by providing $8 million for the Bay Area Regional Water Recycling Program. On behalf of my constituents and the communities around our region, I want to sincerely thank Chairman OBEY, Chairman VISCLOSKEY, Ranking Members LEWIS and FRELINGHUYSEN, and especially the Committee staff, for their support for this important funding. The funds will quickly create and sustain jobs, and will provide a reliable water supply for local planners and residents.

I look forward to working with the Bureau of Reclamation to ensure that they expeditiously enter into individual agreements with the local implementing agencies so that the Bay Area projects are quickly funded through the Bay Area Clean Water Agencies or its successor. I also know that some of the local water agencies in the Bay Area had to begin their projects before this bill was completed so that they did not lose their state and local funding matches. It is my understanding that the authorized federal funding may be used for reimbursement of construction costs already underway and carried out. As the Bureau works with the local agencies to disburse the funding in this bill, those agreements should provide for reimbursement of the projects' construction costs as necessary.

I strongly support the FY 2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. BRADY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my strong support for the provisions of the Omnibus Appropriations Act that relate to funding the operations and programs of Legislative Branch. I am grateful to my esteemed colleagues on the Legislative Branch Subcommittee, particularly the able Chairwoman Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ, for their hard work and diligence on developing a good bill. There are five provisions that I am especially pleased with: the increase in the Members' Representational Allowance; the increase in Committee Funding; employee benefit parity with the Executive Branch; support for the Wounded Warrior Program; and the Speaker's Green the Capitol initiative. These are crucially important appropriations that need our support.

An increase in the Members' Representational Allowance is an overdue necessity. As you know, these funds have nothing to do with Members' pay or campaign expenses; they are simply the funds that allow us to do our jobs. It is how our offices, staff, and business travel are paid for. It is how we represent, support, and serve our constituents. Without an adequate increase in the MRA, our ability to serve our constituents diminishes greatly. As more and more of our constituents fall on hard times, we need to be there to serve their needs and interests. Our offices need to be more responsive and more helpful than ever. We need this reasonable and realistic increase to simply fulfill those obligations.

In 2006, the MRA increased only 1.6%, and in 2007, only 2.7%. These changes didn't even account for cost of living increases, making our offices unable to offer competitive salaries. When our offices are not able to offer competitive pay with the private sector, we lose the ability to attract and retain the best and brightest staff. Now, in this time of crisis, this is an expense we cannot spare.

In the spirit of fiscal responsibility, there is a provision in this bill directing unused MRA funds to deficit or debt reduction. This provision not only helps the Members in most dire need of this increase, it grants freedom to those who do not. Members who do not spend the full amount of their funds will help us pay down our national debt. In this bill, no tax dollar is wasted.

I also support the increase in the funds available to Committees. With an aggressive legislative agenda from our leadership and from the Obama administration, the demand on our Committees and their staff is greater now than it has been in generations. We must support their staffing requirements, their investigation costs, and oversight expenses if we want to grapple with the varied and complex challenges confronting our nation.

I am also pleased that this bill creates some parity between the Legislative and Executive branches with regards to employee benefits. I urge support for the improved transit and student loan benefits in this bill.

Another important program supported in this bill is the Wounded Warrior program. It is becoming harder and harder for Americans everywhere seeking employment, and this is especially true for our wounded veterans. The continued support of the Wounded Warrior program fulfills an obligation to those who protect our freedoms, and sets an example for employers across the country.

Finally, I would also like to express my support for funding the Speaker's "Green the Capitol" initiative. Not only does this program reduce our carbon footprint, it also creates enormous energy savings. This is the right thing to do for both the environment and the taxpayer. At a time when fiscal responsibility is paramount, it would be irresponsible of us not to support this program.

Each of the provisions mentioned deserves our full support. These are non-partisan issues; both sides of the aisle have the same need to serve their constituents, hire and retain the best people, and improve the operations of the Capitol. I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this bill.

Ms. SCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I rise regarding a provision contained in this legislation to carry out the Innovative Technology Loan Guarantee Program at the U.S. Department of Energy.

Congress established the Innovative Technology Loan Guarantee Program in the Energy Policy Act of 2005, and it is my understanding that in order to implement the program the Appropriations Committee was required to include a specific appropriation together with language limiting the kinds of entities eligible to participate in the program. I am concerned that this language has the inadvertent potential of directly impacting an important energy project in my district that is ready to break ground and will potentially employ more than 3,000 people. I ask your support today in working with me and my colleagues in the Ohio delegation to clarify the language so that it will not have the impact of prohibiting this project from going forward.

I would like to thank Chairman VISCLOSKEY for his work on this concern. I look forward to working with you to correct this situation.

Mr. VISCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, I too rise regarding a provision contained in this legislation to carry out the Innovative Technology Loan Guarantee Program at the U.S. Department of Energy.

I would like to thank Congresswoman SCHMIDT for raising a concern regarding the potential of the language implementing the Innovative Technology Loan Guarantee Program having a negative impact on a project already well along in its development. I would be pleased to work with Representative SCHMIDT and her colleagues in the Ohio delegation to address any unintended consequences.

Ms. LEE of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 1105, the Omnibus Appropriations Act of 2009, and I thank Chairman OBEY, my Chairman, as well as the leadership, for their work in putting this bill together.

Today's action on the Omnibus Appropriations bill will complete action on the federal budget for fiscal year 2009.

When we originally began this process over a year ago, we were dealing with a President who rejected the idea that we needed to invest in our children's education.

He didn't think we should fund job training and employment services to ensure that American workers could compete in the global economy.

He didn't think that all Americans should have access to quality affordable health care, or that we should try and lift up the more than 37 million people living in poverty.

He rejected the basic notion that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure" and tried to cut funding for the CDC, while opposing increases in funding for cutting edge biomedical research to create the next generation of miracle drugs.

He told us in no uncertain terms that he would veto any federal budget we passed that tried to invest in education, job training, healthcare, alternative energy, and local law enforcement and ensure the continued prosperity of our nation.

And he did so while demanding that we provide hundreds of billions of dollars to fund the ongoing war and occupation in Iraq, and to bail out the banking industry for their greed and mismanagement.

Rather than accepting the President's position that the American people were not worth investing in, we decided to wait him out.

Today we have a President, who rejects the failed economic policies and ideologies of the last eight years.

We have a President who believes that, yes, the American people—our constituents—deserve a government that works for them, and that is willing to invest in them to ensure that they can get a good education, live healthy and productive lives, and obtain meaningful employment, and raise their children in a just and peaceful world.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, change has indeed come to our nation's capital. And now we've got to roll up our sleeves and get to work.

The Omnibus Appropriations Act of 2009 makes critical investments in a range of programs and builds on the economic stimulus package to help put America to work.

I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. VAN HOLLEN. Mr. Speaker, I am glad we are finally wrapping up our FY 09 Appropriations work and offer this legislation my full support today.

Instead of slashing our federal investment in priorities like education, health care, energy, law enforcement and biomedical research as President Bush had demanded, this bill complements the economic recovery package by addressing our Nation's immediate needs while laying the foundation for long term economic growth.

For example, to help 6.9 million families pay for college and prepare our students to compete in the 21st century global economy, we allocate $17.3 billion—or $3 billion more than 2008—for Pell Grants.

To provide health care for over 470,000 uninsured Americans during this economic downturn, we provide $2.2 billion—or $125 million above last year's levels—for our community health centers.

To accelerate the deployment of renewable energy technologies and the jobs that go with them, we include $18.5 billion in additional loan guarantee authority for renewables in the Department of Energy's Innovative Technology Loan Guarantee Program.

To keep our communities safe, we designate $3.2 billion—or $495 million above 2008—for State and local enforcement.

And to ensure that America remains the global leader in lifesaving biomedical research, we invest $30.3 billion—or $938 million more than last year—in the National Institutes of Health.

Mr. Speaker, it has been a long time coming, but we now see it was worth the wait. I will cast a "yes" vote and urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. LATHAM. Mr. Speaker, today we come to the House chamber to consider a package of the remaining fiscal year 2009 appropriations bills. We are five months late in acting on these bills, and for no good reason.

The net effect of this delay is two-fold: One, the delay has prevented a number of Federal programs from making necessary mission changes simply because those programs have been frozen in-place under the CR.

Number two, the $410 billion contained in this bill represents annual spending increases for hundreds of programs. These increases are well above necessary levels, especially given that we just passed a stimulus bill that carried $301 billion in new discretionary spending—much of which is for the same programs contained in this omnibus measure, and that we fund every year in the annual process.

In short, many of the programs in this package will get a double dose of funding. Unfortunately, this extra dose will be built into future spending, and that's not fair to the American taxpayer—why, because it locks in trillion dollar deficits.

Apart from the problems with the spending totals in this package, we are allowing a laundry list of policy issues to pass through Congress without any public scrutiny.

A number of these policy issues are troubling to many of us. For example, the omnibus eliminates the "Reading First" Program within the Department of Education. I don't remember debating this issue in the stunted '09 process.

The "Reading First" Program was widely supported for its emphasis on raising reading levels, particularly among low-income children. Just yesterday, I met with an elementary school principal from Iowa who praised the program as one which has made a difference to lots of children in my State.

Another policy change, done through a funding reduction, is a de-emphasis on Yucca Mountain. At a time when we need to be looking at all forms of energy, why would we want to halt construction and design work at Yucca since nuclear waste storage is a big issue. At a minimum, we should have had a debate on this subject.

In the end, this entire process has been a giant abdication of our responsibilities in this body, representing a shameful performance. Our constituents deserve better than the bill before us represents.

I hope that for the FY 2010 funding cycle, the majority will re-discover the value of regular order and transparency. In this way, we can add a little more credibility to the process, and the reputation of this House.

Mr. PRICE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the Clinical and Translational Science Award (CTSA) Program at the National Institutes of Health (NIH). The CTSA program is an important and transformative initiative designed to improve the way biomedical research is conducted across the country, reduce the time it takes for laboratory discoveries to become treatments for patients, engage communities in clinical research efforts, and train the next generation of clinical and translational researchers.

As the Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education Subcommittee noted in its subcommittee mark, the program has the potential to create a new paradigm for clinical and translational research.

I am proud that two of the 38 current CTSA sites, the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and Duke University, are in my district. These two universities have a track record of excellence, and I am pleased that NIH has recognized them as strong research campuses.

Unfortunately, nearly level funding for NIH over the past few years has severely limited the size of the award that can be made to these and the other CTSA-recipient institutions. In addition to hindering the important work being done at the current CTSA sites, the funding challenges have encumbered implementation of the program and threaten to curtail its intended size of 60 sites.

As a firm supporter of NIH, I commend Chairman OBEY on the increased NIH funding in both the FY09 Omnibus Appropriations bill and the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act and thank him for designating for the CTSA program in the Omnibus bill. I look forward to working with my colleagues on the Appropriations Committee to provide robust funding for this important program in the FY10 appropriations cycle.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 1105, the "Omnibus Appropriations Act, 2009". I would like to thank my colleague Chairman OBEY and Ranking Member LEWIS for introducing this important legislation. I would especially like to thank the respective subcommittee chairs and ranking members who I worked closely with in obtaining the funds necessary to help the citizens of the 18th Congressional District of Texas. These funds were vital in helping the Houston area. I want to especially thank:

ALAN MOLLOHAN Chairman and FRANK R. WOLF Ranking member of the subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, Science, and Related Agencies.

PETER J. VISCLOSKEY Chairman and RODNEY P. FRELINGHUYSEN Ranking member of the subcommittee on Energy and Water Development.

DAVID E. PRICE Chairman and HAROLD ROGERS Ranking member of the subcommittee on Homeland Security.

DAVID OBEY Chairman and TODD TIAHRT of the subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and Related Agencies.

TEXAS NEEDS

Critical times call for critical measures. Over the last 13 months, our economy has lost a total of 3.6 million jobs—and continuing job losses in the next few months are predicted. The national unemployment rate is at 7.6 percent, with the great state of Texas seeing an unemployment rate of 6.0 percent and my district of Houston seeing only a little better rate at 5.5 percent.

Our schoolhouses are badly in need of repair and modernization in order to flourish and be competitive in the global marketplace. Our healthcare system needs to be upgraded to allow for more Americans to receive coverage without going bankrupt. Our workforce needs to be retooled to keep up with innovative and new technologies; and our transportation systems need to be expanded. These are only a fraction of the many needs facing Texas and our Nation today.

In my district, I have held recent meetings with the Houston Mayor, school districts, universities, churches, homeowners, and the Houston METRO. They each have expressed their need for full funding to alleviate foreclosure issues, hurricane relief funding, construction issues, technology divides, and law enforcement strengthening.

Recently, President Obama mentioned the Houston's need for greater transportation and infrastructure improvements. I thoroughly agree, which is why I have been working with them for over 20 years to complete construction of the Northeast and South RAIL lines. METRO has indicated that it only requires $183 million to complete this rail line.

Houstonians need this infrastructure to relieve congestion and provide adequate public transportation, and an investment that will mean jobs for our constituents through the transportation sector in our communities. Creating this critical infrastructure in Houston will allow Houstonians to work and will provide a tremendous boost to community development and mobility.

OMNIBUS DETAILS

Last year, this body passed only one of the twelve appropriations bills, the Military Construction-VA bill. The Senate Appropriations Committee approved nine of the twelve bills.

This Omnibus represents a measure worked out by both chambers—functionally resembling a conference report—and significantly increases funding levels compared to FY 2008 levels that were extended through March 6 by the enacted resolution, PL 110-329.

HR 1105 appropriates $410 billion, $31 billion, 8%, more than current funding, in discretionary funding, which represents the largest percentage increase for discretionary spending in regular appropriations in decades. It also contains $637.5 billion in mandatory spending for entitlement programs, for a grand total appropriation of $1.048 trillion in FY 2009. The bill covers appropriations for departments and agencies that would have been funded by the nine regular FY 2009 appropriations bills that were not enacted last year. These departments are currently funded under a continuing resolution that expires on March 6.

For our constituents who believe that we here in Congress do not understand their financial woes and their caps on raises and bonuses, let it be made clear that not only do we understand but we hold ourselves to the same standard. The recommended rule for the bill automatically incorporates a provision into the measure that blocks any cost-of-living increase in the salaries of members of Congress in 2010.

This bill provides the following amounts:

Agriculture—$108 billion for the Agriculture Department, $17.6 billion, 16%, more than provided in FY 2008. It includes $87.8 billion, 81%, in mandatory spending and $20.5 billion in discretionary funding. The total includes $54 billion for food stamps, $14 billion, 26%, more than current levels, as well as $2 billion for the Food and Drug Administration, $335 million, 16%, more than the current level, and 15% more for rural development programs.

Commerce-Justice-Science—$57.9 billion, 10%, more than the current level, for the Commerce and Justice Departments, and science agencies. It includes a 16% increase in funds to assist state and local law enforcement agencies.

Energy & Water—$33.8 billion for the Energy Department, Interior Department, Army Corps of Engineers, and related programs—$2.3 billion, 7%, more than the current level. It provides 12% more than current funding for energy assistance and alternative energy research, but 18% less for nuclear energy and 9% less for “clean coal” projects.

Financial Services—$44.6 billion, $58 million more than the current level, for the Treasury Department, the federal judiciary, the District of Columbia, the Executive Office of the President, and various independent agencies.

Interior-Environment—$27.6 billion for Interior Department, Agriculture Department, Indian Health Service, Environmental Protection Agency, and related programs—$1 billion, 4%, more than the current level.

Labor-HHS-Education—$625.7 billion, of which $152.3 billion is discretionary funding and $473.4 billion is mandatory spending, for the departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, HHS, and Education. The discretionary total is $7.4 billion, 5%, more than the current level, and includes $30.3 billion for the National Institutes of Health, 3% more than current funding, $15.8 billion for education for disadvantaged children programs, 2% more than the current level; 7% more for Education Department programs; and 4% more for the Centers for Disease Control.

Legislative Branch—$4.4 billion for the legislative branch, $432 million, 11%, more than the current level. This appropriation includes $1.3 billion for the House and $895 million for the Senate.

State-Foreign Operations—$36.8 billion in foreign aid, State Department operations and export assistance, $3.8 billion, 12%, more than the current level. The bill provides 14% more for international organizations, but 43% less for the Bush administration’s program to aid developing nations that meet certain political and economic standards.

Transportation-HUD—$108.7 billion in budgetary resources for the Transportation Department, the Housing and Urban Development, HUD, Department, and five related agencies. This total includes $55 billion in discretionary appropriations, $6.2 billion, 13%, more than current funding.

Homeland Security—$100 million for the U.S. Secret Service, including $61 million for Secret Service protective missions. Of that amount, $25 million would be for the first-year costs to hire 150 additional special agents to meet increased presidential and vice presidential protection requirements. The measure also extends the authorization of three programs through Sept. 30, 2009 the Basic Pilot, E-Verify, program, the EB-5 Visa program, and the National Flood Insurance Program. In addition, it extends the authorization of the Commission on the Prevention of Weapons of Mass Destruction Proliferation and Terrorism until March 1, 2010.

CONCLUSION

As the representative for the 18th congressional district of Texas, I am very pleased that this Omnibus bill will aid people in my district that desperately need it. We have rail lines that need to be expanded, schools that are in dire need of construction, hospitals that cannot help the sick because of capacity issues, and areas still reeling from Hurricane’s Katrina, Rita, and Ike.

The assistance my district will receive is outstanding. I plan to continue to work with Chairman OBEY and the Appropriations Committee staff to ensure that necessary funding goes straight to the city and county agencies, companies, schools, and nonprofits that need it to better assist the people of Houston.

I trust that the money in this omnibus along with monies from the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act will begin to bring not only relief but life to our economy.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 1105, the Fiscal Year 2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act. This bill completes Congress’ work funding essential government services for 2009 and invests in important priorities to get our economy back on track. H.R. 1105 provides for the needs of North Carolina’s most vulnerable citizens and will help our State make the investments it needs to make for a brighter future.

As the former superintendent of schools in North Carolina, I am particularly pleased that this bill continues our commitment to educational opportunities for all Americans. Economists tell us that strategic investments in education are one of the best ways to help America become more productive and competitive. This bill builds on the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act to support state and local community efforts to improve schools, and on the efforts of individuals and families to provide a better life for their children. H.R. 1105 provides $66.5 billion for the Department of Education, a 7 percent increase over last year. In these times when state budgets are stretched to the limit, it increases the federal share of special education costs and increases Title I grants for disadvantaged students to ensure our local communities are able to continue to help our most vulnerable students. It provides increases to student financial aid to help 1.4 million students go to school, and helps 6.9 million families pay for college with an increase in the maximum Pell Grant to $4,360. It provides additional funding for Head Start, gives child care assistance to 11,000 more children, and provides 1.7 million with quality afterschool services that supplement their school activities. These are fundamental investments that provide the key to the future for our nation’s children.

This bill makes many other critical investments to address our immediate needs while laying the foundation for our long-term prosperity. H.R. 1105 provides $15.3 billion for the Labor Department, providing critical job training, unemployment, and workforce protection services to our working families. It appropriates a total of $496 billion for the Department of Health and Human Services, including critical support for Medicare and Medicaid. It includes $108 billion for the Department of Agriculture, including a 15 percent increase in funding for rural development. It appropriates $57.9 billion for Commerce, Justice, and the science agencies, including a 16 percent increase for state and local law enforcement activities. By improving support for research and development at our nation’s universities, federal laboratories, and small business incubators, funding in H.R. 1105 creates jobs and contributes to U.S. competitiveness. Finally, this bill invests in energy security with a 12 percent increase in funding for renewable energy and energy efficiency initiatives, which will help us reduce our dependence on foreign fuel sources.

This bill is not just about spending. H.R. 1105 also cuts and eliminates government programs that are not working, and provides accountability and oversight through improvements in regulatory agencies. In these difficult economic times, it is more important than ever that we wisely invest the tax dollars that have been entrusted to us, and this bill is a sound investment in our future.

Mr. Speaker, Congress has a solemn duty to pass a funding bill that honors the values of the American people. By addressing America’s domestic needs, providing for our foreign obligations, and investing in the future, H.R. 1105 reflects these values. I support H.R. 1105, and I urge my colleagues to join me in voting for this bill.

Mr. CAPUANO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the Clinical and Translational Science Award (CTSA) Program at the National Institutes of Health (NIH). The CTSA program is a noteworthy initiative with the potential to enhance and invigorate our nation’s clinical and translational research enterprise.

As the representative from the 8th Congressional District of Massachusetts, I am especially pleased that the program makes significant efforts to create new clinical research homes in academic settings and, so, strengthen our nation’s current and future research infrastructure. Furthermore, I am quite proud that Boston institutions; Boston University, Harvard University, and Tufts University are 3 of the 38 sites that currently comprise the growing CTSA network.

Over the past few years, roughly level funding for NIH has severely limited the size of the award that can be made to these and the other CTSA-recipient institutions. These funding challenges have had dire consequences for the program’s implementation and have seriously impeded its very necessary expansion.

As an ardent supporter of NIH, I thank Chairman OBEY on the increased NIH funding in both the FY09 Omnibus Appropriations bill and the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the Omnibus Appropriations Act, despite many severe misgivings I have with the legislation.

Last night the President gave us a frank and candid assessment of the dire situation of our economy, and I remain committed to ensuring that appropriations bills reflect an appropriate federal response. This bill will strengthen the social safety net so that individuals and families that have been affected by the recession can meet their daily needs. This bill includes substantial and badly needed increases in funding for food assistance to combat starvation and malnutrition in the elderly and those of modest income.

The Ohio Department of Job and Family Services has been inundated by a surge in unemployment claims. Constituents have called my office to tell me that they cannot even get through on the phone to speak to someone about their claim. Facing such an extraordinary increase in demand, I am glad that the states will get some help. The bill increases funding by 10% for state offices to process this surge in unemployment claims.

Cleveland, unfortunately, has been at the epicenter of the subprime mortgage and foreclosure crisis. The number of foreclosures continues to increase; some neighborhoods still average two foreclosures per day. Up to 6,000 voucher holders have yet to find affordable housing in Cuyahoga County—and this does not include the estimated 19,000 people who qualify for vouchers but are forced to endure a years-long waiting list.

The bill increases overall funding for the Department of Housing and Urban Development by 10%. This includes increases in funding for the Public Housing Operating Fund to keep the doors open in our existing public housing, the Public Housing Capital Fund to build new public housing, and tenant- and project-based voucher programs. The bill also increases funding for homeless assistance grants.

The bill provides several other funding increases in areas of particular need for Northeast Ohio. There is $187 million dedicated to making emergency communication more reliable through interoperability funding. There is a $385 million increase in funding for NASA, an economic anchor for the region and the state. There is $273 million for research on more fuel-efficient vehicles, which will help our ailing auto industry and the other industries on which it relies. There is $40.7 billion in infrastructure funding, a $484 million increase over FY08 levels and an integral part of Northeast Ohio's economic recovery.

However, I am deeply saddened and frustrated by sections of the State and Foreign Operations portion of this bill that continue counterproductive policies regarding the Middle East and drug policy. I am hopeful that with the leadership of President Obama a new U.S. policy on the Middle East will emerge. It is time for the U.S. to move beyond the biased policy contained in this portion of the bill.

The surest way for this body to ensure the safety and security of Israel while encouraging peace in the Middle East is to craft a policy that encourages Israel to end the blockade of Gaza and the occupation of Palestinian lands. The U.S. must also call on Israel to implement a freeze on settlement building.

Instead this bill undermines any effort to position the U.S. as an honest broker for peace in the region. The bill gives $75 million in funding for aid to be shared between Gaza and the West Bank while giving $2.4 billion in grants for Israel including $670 million for procurement of military equipment alone. Adding to this extreme imbalance, the bill also places far more restrictions on the humanitarian aid to Gaza than on the arms funding for Israel. If the U.S. was an honest broker of peace, the reverse would be true. The United Nations has declared in no uncertain terms that peace in the Middle East, which is the best way for Israel to achieve security, cannot be achieved militarily. By favoring arms over aid, this bill takes us in the wrong direction during a time when relations between Gaza and Israel are particularly strained.

This bill also includes funding for counter-narcotics initiatives in Afghanistan, Mexico, Colombia, and other regions in Latin America, continuing supply-side interdiction efforts that have done nothing to disturb the flow of illicit drugs into our country. Research clearly demonstrates that money directed to domestic demand-reduction efforts—drug treatment, drug abuse prevention, youth intervention programs, and the like—is more effective at reducing drug consumption and curtailing the flow of illicit drugs into the country. Moreover, such efforts usually increase the price of drugs in circulation, which only leads to increased violence and crime in communities. So long as the demand for a product exists, enterprising drug dealers will find a way to get the drugs to those addicted to them.

I support this bill because the needs of my district come first, and the money in this bill will go far toward alleviating the stress on my constituents and my district caused by the economic downturn. However, I find it reprehensible that I am also forced to support these other provisions, and I look forward to working with leadership and the Administration to support policies that engage all parties and encourage peace rather than aggression.

Mr. FORBES. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to a cost-of-living increase for Members of Congress. We are currently faced with difficult economic times and an expanding federal deficit. Our economy is in a recession, unemployment figures are on the rise, home values are falling, and our national debt exceeds $10 trillion. Congress must not insulate itself from the crises at hand and I believe it is past time for Congress to be responsible. The most immediate action we can take is to cancel the automatic pay increase system currently in place for Members of Congress.

To address this issue, I recently cosponsored H.R. 156 in this 111th Congress, legislation that would prevent Members from receiving an automatic cost of living adjustment in the future. The 27th Amendment to the Constitution restricts the current Congress from altering its pay for 2009. I am disappointed that H.R. 156 was not brought to the House floor for a vote to address this important issue. Rather, this issue was lumped into a controversial 1100-plus page omnibus bill for political purposes. By not allowing an independent yes-or-no vote on this provision, we simply reinforce the impression that many important legislative measures are structured to be political gamesmanship. If Congress is to vote itself a pay raise, it should be done in sunlight in the full view of the American public, not through a quiet procedural motion hidden in the shadows. The people of Virginia deserve accountability and transparency from their elected officials.

I oppose the automatic cost-of-living increase for Members of Congress. Each of us should be on the record with our constituents as to whether we believe an increase to our own salaries is justified. In this time of increased economic hardship, I am going on the record in firm opposition to this pay increase. Since I was not allowed to vote yes or no, this forum has become my only recourse. Until the procedural barriers are removed, we will not have the transparent process that Americans deserve from their government. I will continue to fight for fiscal responsibility at all levels of government spending.

Mr. OBEY. I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time for debate on the bill has expired.

Pursuant to House Resolution 184, the previous question is ordered on the bill, as amended.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Pursuant to clause 10 of rule XX, the yeas and nays are ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 245, nays 178, not voting 8, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

RAISING A QUESTION OF THE PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I offer a question of the privileges of the House previously noticed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

H. RES. 189

Whereas, Roll Call reported on February 9, 2008, that the offices of a prominent lobbying firm had been raided by the FBI in November;

Whereas, The New York Times reported on February 10, 2009, that “Federal prosecutors are looking into the possibility that a prominent lobbyist may have funneled bogus campaign contributions” to Members of Congress;

Whereas, the Washington Post reported on February 14, 2009, that they “examined contributions that were reported as being made by the firm’s employees and consultants, and found several people who were not registered lobbyists and did not work for the lobbying firm”;

Whereas, Roll Call reported on February 11, 2009, that “the defense-appropriations-focused lobbying shop that the FBI raided this November” had in recent years “spread millions of campaign contributions to law-makers”;

Whereas, The Hill reported on February 10, 2009, that the raided firm “earned more than $14 million in lobbying revenue” and “specializes in obtaining earmarks in the defense budget for a long list of clients”;

Whereas, The Hill reported on February 10, 2009, that the 2008 clients of this firm had “received $299 million worth of earmarks, according to Taxpayers for Common Sense”;

Whereas, CQ Today reported on February 19, 2009, that “104 House Members got earmarks for projects sought by clients of the firm in the 2008 defense appropriations bills,” and that 87 percent of this bipartisan group of Members received campaign contributions from the raided firm;

Whereas, CQ Today also reported that “Members who took responsibility for the firm’s earmarks in that spending bill have, since 2001, accepted a cumulative $1,815,138 in campaign contributions from the firm’s political action committee and employees”;

Whereas, Roll Call reported on February 19, 2009, that a bipartisan group of four Members have made plans to divest themselves of campaign contributions received from the raided firm;

Whereas, Politico reported on February 12, 2009, that “several sources said FBI agents have spent months laying the groundwork for their current investigation, including conducting research on earmarks and campaign contributions”;

Whereas, numerous press reports and editorials have alleged several cases of influence peddling between Members of Congress and outside interests seeking Federal funding;

Whereas, such reports and editorials reflect public distrust and have raised inquiries and criticism about the integrity of congressional proceedings and the dignity of the institution; and

Whereas, the House of Representatives should respond to such claims and demonstrate integrity in its proceedings:

Now, therefore, be it Resolved That—

(a) The Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, or a subcommittee of the committee designated by the committee and its members appointed by the chairman and ranking member, is instructed to investigate the relationship between earmark requests already made by Members and the source and timing of past campaign contributions.

(b) The Committee on Standards of Official Conduct shall submit a report of its findings to the House of Representatives within 2 months after the date of adoption of this resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution qualifies.

MOTION TO TABLE

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to lay on the table.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 226, noes 182, answered “present” 12, not voting 11, as follows:

Mr. CHRIS LEE. This resolution, House Resolution 183, expresses condolences to the families, friends and loved ones of the victims of the February 12, 2009, accident of Flight 3407 which took place in Clarence Center, New York.

There were 50 people on board Flight 3407, including passengers and crew. Sadly, all lives were lost. Our sympathy goes out to the victims and to each and every one of their families, friends and loved ones.

Losing a loved one is tragic, but the loss is compounded when it's as the result of an unfortunate and unforeseen situation. I'm hopeful that this resolution will, in some small way, comfort the families and friends of all of those who lost their lives on Flight 3407.

I also want to thank the first responders and those who are providing support and assistance to the families of the victims. Their efforts are appreciated.

The National Transportation Safety Board is thoroughly investigating every aspect of this accident. The Board is responsible for determining the circumstances and cause of this accident, and they will report back to Congress. In the meantime, I want to assure the families, the public, the Members of Congress, that those charged with the investigation of this tragedy will not rest until the cause of this aviation accident has been determined. The loss of even one life in an aviation accident is unacceptable, but the American public should know that our commercial airlines today are both safe and reliable.

The National Airspace System handles almost 50,000 flights per day and more than 7 million passengers annually. Since 2007, the commercial airline industry has maintained the lowest fatality accident rate in commercial aviation history. Up until this accident, the FAA reported no on-board fatalities in passenger operations in the past 2 years and now approaching almost 3 years with about 1.6 billion people transported during that period.

Despite the amazing safety record, I wish we lived in a world where we could eliminate all accidents and risks. While I don't believe that we can do that, I do believe that we can continue to work as effectively as possible to do everything we can to avoid these types of accidents in the future.

Again, I want to express my condolences to the families, friends, and loved ones of the victims on board Flight 3407, and also to Mr. CHRIS LEE, my distinguished colleague from New York, and his constituents.

I yield to my colleague from New York (Mr. LEE) such time as he may consume.

Mr. LEE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding and appreciate the support from our State delegation, many of whom cosponsored this resolution.

I especially want to thank Mr. HIGGINS and Ms. SLAUGHTER who have exhibited untiring leadership in offering assistance in the days since this tragedy has struck.

The night of Thursday, February 12, was going along like any other winter evening in the small town of Clarence. Clarence is located less than 20 miles from the city of Buffalo. At the home of the Wielinski family, 22-year-old Jill was watching television with her mother Karen, while her father, Doug, was in the dining room doing some housework. It was at that moment that Continental Flight 3407 carrying 49 passengers and crew struck the Wielinski home, taking Doug's life. All on board the plane were lost.

Each and every soul is a significant loss to our community. Among them: a prominent human rights activist; a September 11th widow; a retired Air Force reservist; an accomplished jazz guitarist; the cantor at a Williamsville temple; the director of a youth service program; a program manager for Northrop Grumman; a nurse at Westfield Memorial Hospital; a second-year law student; the daughter of a Holocaust survivor; a Vietnam veteran with two Purple Hearts; and lastly, a personal friend who was expecting the birth of her first child due at the end of May.

At that moment about a quarter mile away, Clarence Center Fire Chief David Case was also having a quiet evening at home when he heard on his radio that a plane had crashed and struck a house nearby. Chief Case was one of the first to arrive on the scene that night, but by no means was he by himself. Volunteers from throughout Clarence were assisted by crews from Newstead, Akron, Harris Hill, Rapids, East Amherst, Swormville, Amherst, Millgrove, Bowmansville, the Village of Lancaster, Brighton, and the Buffalo Niagara International Airport's Aircraft Rescue Firefighter unit.

Their efforts were supported by hundreds of volunteers who gave their time and energy to support the first responders and the families of the victims.

Last night, Chief Case sat in this very gallery just a handful of rows away from the First Lady as the President of the United States addressed Congress on the state of our Nation. Chief Case did not come here to accept the salutations normally afforded everyday heroes among us. He said he came "only to be a representative of the men and women of Clarence Center Fire Company and all of the first responders."

To those first responders and all of the volunteers, I simply want to say thank you.

Chief Case was indeed a fitting representative for a small and proud town that just last year celebrated its bicentennial. Clarence is where my wife and I chose to make our home, and it is where my 3-year-old son will grow up; and I hope that he, in turn, raises a family there as well.

Since the night of this accident, we have been posting on our Web site messages from families of the victims. Thoughts and prayers have come in from all around the country. One message we received was from Holly Henderson, a Clarence resident, and it reads:

"I'm a Clarence resident and a frequent traveler. I thank all of those who were deeply concerned for me, my family and neighbors and ask that they continue to pray for the souls whose lives ended in such tragedy. It is awesome to see how the community has put up ribbons and have come together in this time of crisis. It confirms why I moved back to this area after being gone for so long and feel very proud to be part of this great community in western New York where the people are truly the best in the world."

Of course, this resolution is not nearly tribute enough to the memories of the victims and the courage of their families, and the echoes of the shock and grief we felt that long Thursday night are still with us. We can find comfort in the fact that even in tough times like these, families and communities come together, rally around one another and do whatever they can to help those in need.

Again, I thank the members of our delegation for their support and for this resolution.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, I urge all Members to support the resolution before us, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ARCURI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague from Clarence for his leadership in bringing this resolution, and also I'd like to thank him for the courage that he showed. As soon as this happened, he immediately recognized where his duty was, and that was to be home in Clarence, and he immediately headed home to be there to help to show leadership, to show his constituents where his priorities were; and that was at home where he was needed most.

So I thank him for what he has done. Clearly, this has been a shock to his community and to the entire country. Certainly, while the whole country has felt it, no one has felt it more than western New York.

I would like to yield 3 minutes to my colleague from western New York (Mr. HIGGINS).

Mr. HIGGINS. Thank you, Mr. ARCURI. I, too, want to join you in commending our colleague, CHRIS LEE, for going back to assist in the recovery effort. I spent time with the Congressman on Saturday, where we toured the site with several other officials.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that you and our colleagues join me in offering sincere condolences to the families who lost loved ones in the crash of Flight 3407.

What was for many to be a joyous reuniting of family and friends became a time of unspeakable grief and sorrow. An ordinary evening in a home in a suburban Buffalo neighborhood became a family's tragic nightmare.

The victims of this tragedy need our support and empathy during this difficult time in their lives. My community has demonstrated great strength and compassion as it mourns the loss of 50 lives of those loved ones, many of whom were vibrant members of the western New York community.

Our community's response has included professional and spiritual counseling, as well as donated meals and thousands of letters offering sympathy and support. The families will undoubtedly experience difficulty and sadness in the days ahead, but I am confident that the loving embrace of the western New York community will continue to comfort and sustain them.

Mr. Speaker, I also ask that you join me in thanking the first responders, including many police and firefighting agencies, who worked through the night and each succeeding day in the recovery effort. Their work is an inefably beautiful tribute to the decency of the human spirit and to their professionalism. They deserve our respect, our admiration, and our deepest gratitude.

Mr. Speaker, this tragedy and the loss to the Buffalo community is profound, but the love and support of our community is much greater. I am thankful to those dedicated individuals who responded to this disaster and to those who are offering counseling and support to the families and workers still trying to come to grips with this terrible tragedy.

We will never forget those we lost that night. I am pleased to join my colleague, CHRIS LEE, in offering support to all of those who knew them and who loved them. I thank CHRIS LEE for bringing this resolution to the floor.

Mr. ARCURI. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to again thank my colleague, Mr. LEE, for his leadership on this bill. And I would urge a "yes" vote on this resolution.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, less than two weeks ago we learned about a terrible accident in Clarence, New York, a few miles outside of Buffalo.

Our worst fears were confirmed when it was reported that many lives were lost.

I know that the pain of the families and friends who lost loved ones on Continental Connection Flight 3407 is immeasurable. My prayers are with them today and always.

An accident like this is always a tragedy but when it happens so close to your home, it is particularly devastating.

In Western New York we take care of each other.

After the accident, first responders and ordinary citizens rushed to the scene to do their best to save lives.

They are heroes to us for their tremendous efforts.

As we grieve and pay tribute to those we have lost, I stand in unity with my colleagues, state, and local officials, to continue assisting our community during this difficult time.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H. Res. 183, which expresses sympathy to those who lost family, friends, and loved ones in the tragic crash of Continental Connection Flight 3407. The lives of all 49 passengers and crew on the flight were lost on February 12, 2009, when Flight 3407 crashed in Clarence Center, New York, about 5 miles outside of Buffalo. The plane crashed into a house on the ground, killing one person inside as well.

The Bombardier Dash 8 Q400 was en route from Newark Liberty International Airport and it had begun its descent into Buffalo Niagara International Airport. The flight was operated by Colgan Air. The flight data recorder and cockpit voice recorder that were recovered from the crash reveal that the plane underwent severe changes in pitch at about 1,600 feet above ground level before it crashed.

Emergency personnel responded to the scene immediately after the crash to quell the fire and contain the accident scene. The National Transportation Safety Board also responded, sending investigators to the site to conduct an in-depth investigation. Not much is known for sure at this point. It is known that the plane was flying in icing conditions, on autopilot with the de-icing system activated. The NTSB investigation will likely explore many issues, such as icing, pilot training and procedures, and aircraft design. The Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure will watch the investigation as it unfolds with keen interest.

This accident, along with other recent aviation safety events, underscores the importance of not lowering our guard on aviation safety. It is unfortunate that this tragic event occurred. I hope that the findings of the investigation will lead to further improvements in aviation safety that will prevent this type of disaster from occurring again.

I thank the gentleman from New York, Mr. LEE, for bringing H. Res. 183 to the floor, and my sympathies go out to the people of your district. I urge my colleagues to support this resolution.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H. Res. 183, a resolution expressing condolences to the families, friends, and loved ones of the victims of the crash of Continental Connection Flight 3407.

I want to thank my colleagues, Mr. LEE and the members of the New York delegation, for introducing this resolution.

On February 12, 2009, Continental Connection Flight 3407 crashed just a few miles from the Buffalo Niagara International Airport. It was a tragic accident and our thoughts and prayers are with the families of the victims. Fifty people died as a result of this crash, and an investigation is underway to determine the cause of that crash.

While we have the safest air transportation system in the world, we must not become complacent.

Again, we, as a nation, mourn the loss of Continental Connection Flight 3407 and urge my colleagues to strongly support H. Res. 183.

Mr. MASSA. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep solemnity that I take this moment to offer my sincere condolences to the families and friends of the 50 individuals who lost their lives when Flight 3407 crashed in Clarence, NY on February 12th. While we can never bring them back we can make sure they are honorably remembered for their many contributions, both big and small, in the lives of those all around them. I further extend my condolences to my colleague, Rep. CHRIS LEE, who represents the 26th Congressional District where the tragedy occurred.

Mr. ARCURI. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. ARCURI) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 183.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the ayes have it.

Mr. ARCURI. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

The point of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

FEDERAL RESERVE IS THE CULPRIT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, the Federal Reserve is the culprit; it has delivered this crisis to us. The Federal Reserve's low interest rate policy is a big mistake; it is not a panacea.

Artificially low interest rates are achieved by inflating the money supply. Low interest rates penalize the thrifty, and those who save are cheated. It promotes consumption and borrowing over savings and investing. Manipulating interest rates is an immoral act, it is economically destructive. The policy of artificially low interest rates caused our problems and, therefore, cannot be the solution.

The market rate of interest is crucial information for the smooth operation of the economy. A central bank setting interest rates is price fixing and is a form of central economic planning. Price fixing is a tool of socialists and destroys production.

Central bankers, politicians and bureaucrats can't know what the proper rate should be. They lack the knowledge and are deceived by their aggrandizement. Manipulating the money supply and interest rates rejects all the principles of the free market.

Ironically, free markets and sound money generates low rates, but unlike the artificially low rates orchestrated by the Fed, the information conveyed is beneficial to investors and savers.

The Congress, by conceding this authority, conveys extraordinary economic powers to the elite few. This is a power that has been abused throughout history. Only the Federal Reserve can inflate the currency, creating new money and credit out of thin area, in secrecy, without oversight or supervision.

Inflation facilitates deficits, needless wars, and excessive welfare spending. Debasing a currency is counterfeiting. It steals value from every dollar earned or saved. It robs the people and makes them poorer. It is the enemy of the working person.

Inflation is the most vicious and regressive of all forms of taxation. It transfers wealth from the middle class to the privileged rich.

The economic chaos that results from a policy of central bank inflation inevitably leads to political instability and violence. It is an ancient tool of all authoritarians.

Inflating is never a benefit to freedom-loving people. It destroys prosperity and feeds the fires of war. It is responsible for recessions and depressions. It is deceptive, addictive, and causes delusions of grandeur with regards to wealth and knowledge.

Wealth cannot be achieved by creating money by fiat. It instead destroys wealth and it rewards the special interests. Depending on monetary fraud for national prosperity or a reversal of our downward spiral is riskier than depending on the lottery.

Inflation has been used to pay for all the wars and empires, and they all end badly. Inflationism and corporatism engenders protectionism and trade wars. It prompts scapegoating; blaming foreigners, illegal immigrants, ethnic minorities, and too often freedom itself for the predictable events and suffering that results. Besides, the whole process is unconstitutional. There is no legal authority to operate such a monetary system. So let's stop it. Let us restore a policy of prosperity, peace and liberty. The time has come. Let's end the Fed.

CONGRATULATING JOYCE BEAN

tleman from Illinois (Mr. HARE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, last week, in Galesburg, Illinois, I held a town hall meeting to discuss the economic recovery package. While I was there, I told a standing-room-only crowd that Joyce Bean, who manages my Galesburg office, was retiring after 26 years of service to the 17th Congressional District. Joyce received a standing ovation. That one moment captured just how much the people of Galesburg, Knox County, and the 17th Congressional District and I appreciate her service.

Joyce has spent her entire career giving to others. As a member of the Communication Workers of America, the United Way of Knox County, and a longtime staffer to my predecessor, Congressman Lane Evans, she made a lasting impact on so many people's lives.

Upon receiving a prestigious community service award from the United Way in 1986, Joyce was called "one of those rare phenomena that comes along only once in a lifetime." Joyce helped provide Christmas presents for needy children, acquired an acre of land for local Boy Scouts, and organized the area's first recycling drive, just to name a few. She was the first woman to become a United Way President in Galesburg, Illinois. Through her leadership, she has inspired others to answer the call of service.

When Maytag Corporation shut its doors in 2004, she was the first person to offer displaced workers the helping hand they so desperately needed. And as a member of my staff, she has assisted local families with everything from retirement security to workers rights, and even going to bat for them with our friends at the Internal Revenue Service.

For her service to the labor movement, the city of Galesburg, the 17th Congressional District, and our entire Nation, I salute her. Joyce, congratulations on your retirement. You will be missed not just by the staff, not just by me, but the entire people of the 17th District.

Once again, Joyce, congratulations, and best of luck on your retirement.

LET'S IMPLEMENT SOLUTIONS THAT PRODUCE RESULTS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Kansas (Ms. JENKINS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. JENKINS. I know many Americans are struggling to pay their monthly mortgage payments. Unemployment is on the rise, yet more than 90 percent of homeowners are still able to scrimp and save enough each month to pay their mortgage.

Congress and government agencies have thrown billions at this crisis, yet we have little to show for it. And President Obama even said in his speech last night that the recovery plans will require significant additional resources from the Federal Government, probably more than what is already set aside. He left the door open to come back and ask for more taxpayer dollars to bail out the bad decisions of others, yet we have seen little positive impact from the initial expenditure.

Congress should not be in the business of rewarding bad actors, and I'm concerned that is exactly what H.R. 1106, the Helping Families Save Their Homes Act of 2009, and the President's plan for the housing crisis will do.

One piece of H.R. 1106 is a cram-down proposal. While the goal of the proposal may be admirable, when we see re-default rates of 55 percent within only 6 months, is that really solving the problem?

Lenders from the Second District in Kansas have told me this cram-down proposal may force an increase in interest rates. How does this increased borrowing cost benefit that young married couple looking to buy their first home? Not to mention, as I read in Business Week yesterday, many times loan modifications can result in higher monthly payments.

I understand exactly the sentiments shared with me by my constituent, Craig Grable from Wathena, Kansas. He sent me a letter telling me he pays his mortgage on time each month. He is angry that folks who have bought houses they could not afford are being rewarded by those housing plans.

He said, "If the market recovers and he sells that home for a profit, he basically is keeping my tax dollars, and that is not right."

Folks around the country like Craig who made their payments on time should not have to pay for the risky loans made by irresponsible lenders and speculators who got into loans they could not afford. At a minimum before anyone is given government assistance on their mortgage, there needs to be a clear set of eligibility standards including income verification, proof the borrower has not intentionally defaulted on the mortgage in order to benefit from government assistance, and assurances that the Federal Government is not subsidizing vacation homes.

Craig ended his letter to me saying, "This nonsense has to stop." And I agree. Action without results is futile. Let us implement solutions that produce results.

IT'S TIME TO TALK TO IRAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak about the urgent need for the United States to begin direct talks with Iran about its nuclear program.

Time is of the essence. The United Nations reported last week that Iran has more enriched uranium than the world knew and is now capable of building an atomic bomb if it continues with its enrichment program. Iran also recently put a satellite into orbit showing that it has the ballistic missile capacity to deliver a nuclear weapon against an enemy.

The Iranians insist that their nuclear program is for peaceful domestic purposes only, but their nuclear program has raised fears in the Middle East and made that region an even more unstable and dangerous place.

Mr. Speaker, Iran's advanced nuclear program shows that the Bush administration's policy of refusing to talk was a dismal failure. It called Iran part of the "Axis of Evil." Then for nearly 8 years the Bush administration's approach consisted of saber-rattling and threats of war, and look where that's gotten us. Absolutely nowhere.

As someone who strongly opposes nuclear proliferation, I urge that we launch a vigorous diplomatic effort aimed at getting Iran to behave more responsibly. We must begin that effort immediately before their nuclear program gets even more advanced. In the days ahead, we can look for every possible opening to begin face-to-face talks.

This diplomatic effort must include a strong partnership with the international community. The U.N. Security Council, for example, has demanded that Iran suspend its uranium enrichment program. So we must work with the members of the Council to put peaceful pressure on Iran to do just that.

I think that President Obama described the situation best last August when he said, "My job as President would be to try to make sure that we are tightening the screws diplomatically on Iran and that we have mobilized the world community to go after their program in a very serious way."

So, Mr. Speaker, the President followed up on that, as we know, on his first day in office. In an interview with an Arabic language television station, he said, "If countries like Iran are willing to unclench their fist, they will find an extended hand from us." This received a positive response from President Ahmadinejad, who said that Iran was ready for "talks based on mutual respect." Who knows what he really meant, but I think we should take him up on this, call his bluff. Let's test him to see if he was serious. As Secretary of State Hillary Clinton has said, "We won't know what we're capable of achieving with Iran until we're actually there working on it."

Mr. Speaker, Iran is currently suffering from tough economic times, high inflation and international isolation. It is also threatening its people miserably. We could take advantage of Iran's problems by offering incentives and help with their problems if they agree to pull the plug on their nuclear ambitions.

During the past administration, there was a great deal of talk about bombing Iran's nuclear facilities, but we all know that would have led us into another disastrous war in the Middle East, and thank heavens we did not do that. But refusing to engage with Iran hasn't worked so far. It's time for a new policy that stresses international cooperation, conflict resolution, and humanitarian assistance.

With President Obama's leadership and willingness to talk and Secretary of State Hillary Clinton's abilities, we can push the restart button, the restart button on our relations with Iran. We must now seize every single opportunity to do so because it appears time might be running out.

ON H.R. 1105, THE OMNIBUS SPENDING BILL, AND THE NEEDS TO PROTECT PRIVATE PROPERTY AND PROMOTE FISCAL RESPONSIBILITY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, last night Members on both sides of the aisle rose repeatedly and applauded the remarks of President Obama, who called upon the American people to show their resilience that they have on so many occasions in the past to rise above the difficulties that we face and to lead our country out of this serious economic crisis.

However, today in the light of day, this Congress has taken a very, very different approach to try to solve those problems: the big government approach.

Today, during the debate on the omnibus spending bill, I had planned to offer an amendment. My amendment would have protected the private property rights of citizens and also highlighted the philosophical differences between the Democrat majority and the Republicans. I would note that not a single amendment was made in order as a result of the vote on this nearly $500 billion spending package. Apparently, the majority believes that government knows best and the leadership of their party in this Congress are the only ones who know best how to dole out Americans' hard-earned money and property and they have no qualms about robbing Peter to pay Paul. Despite the lip service the majority gives about the spirit of the American people, the majority's policies clearly demonstrate that they believe something quite different, that the people cannot be trusted to make the best use of their own money and property nor can they be trusted to turn our economy around.

Republicans actually believe in the American people, and they have put their policies where their mouths are. Republicans unabashedly believe that Americans know best how to control their own money and have advocated for targeted tax relief to individuals and small businesses to help the economy by putting money back into the hands of Americans.

In addition, Republicans believe that the right of private property is a fundamental right that the founders of this Nation consciously sought to protect from overly zealous government bureaucrats. The need for private property protections is especially important in trying times like these when politicians get the idea that they know best the uses for Americans' money and property.

I have sponsored legislation to protect private property from aggressive government use of eminent domain powers, and that is what the amendment I offered at the Rules Committee to the omnibus spending measure would have done. My amendment would have prevented funds in this gigantic spending bill from being used to seize private property from one person to give to another. This seems simple enough, but the majority decided to block this amendment, which would have prevented the use of any of the funds in this massive nearly $500 billion spending measure from being used for that purpose, to take people's property for private economic development purposes. But the majority decided to block the amendment and not allow a vote on the House floor. In fact, the vote to stifle debate on this amendment occurred on a purely partisan basis in the Rules Committee.

It seems clear that the majority's solution to the current economic crisis is to spend other people's money. The truth is that we are beginning to see the results that this laboratory of big government spending is producing, and it is no surprise that the results are dismal. The government simply cannot operate as efficiently nor adapt as quickly as individuals and entrepreneurs.

The likely response by the government to its own failure will be more spending, as is evident from the trillion dollar stimulus package that Congress passed 2 weeks ago as well as the nearly half trillion dollar omnibus spending bill we voted on today. There is no end in sight to the unprecedented levels of spending we are witnessing, and that is precisely why we should draw a very clear line now.

House Republicans believe that instead of spending ease, we need a spending freeze. We may now see a budget deficit of $3 trillion this year alone. That's $3 trillion. Divide that by the 300 million people in the United States, and it's nearly $10,000 for each person in the country that the government will spend more than the government will take in, $10,000 per person more that will be spent on all these massive government programs than the government will take in. This is beyond unacceptable. We need reform, and it is clear that Congress must have this reform forced upon it.

That's why over 160 bipartisan cosponsors have joined me in an attempt to force the Federal Government to rein in spending and eliminate the deficit by amending the Constitution to require it. Earlier this year I introduced a balanced budget constitutional amendment, House Joint Resolution 1. This legislation has already garnered over 160 bipartisan cosponsors, and it requires that total Federal outlays cannot exceed total revenues. We'd have 5 years to bring this into line.

It is time we started the process of reforming the way this government spends money.

This is a simple concept but one that is lost on a congress determined to put political considerations above the common good. Simply put, this constitutional amendment would bind the hands of congress by cutting up its credit cards.

The time to act is now, and if President Obama is serious about his call to rein in spending, then he should join in our call for a balanced budget constitutional amendment to force the Federal Government to do so.

HONORING STAFF SERGEANT JUSTIN BAUER AND HIS WIFE, KARI BAUER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. KISSELL) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KISSELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to offer a tribute to Staff Sergeant Justin Bauer and his wife, Kari.

Staff Sergeant Bauer and his wife, Kari, were both from the State of Colorado. Staff Sergeant Bauer joined the Army and was assigned to the 82nd Airborne and stationed in Fort Bragg, North Carolina. Sergeant Bauer and his wife lived in my district, the Eighth District of North Carolina.

By the words of the sergeant's co-soldiers, he was a leader extraordinaire. He was a noncommissioned officer that exemplified what was meant to be in the leadership role of being a noncommissioned officer. His soldiers looked to him as a friend and a leader and, by all accounts, was an outstanding soldier in our Army.

I bring Sergeant Bauer's attention to the floor, Mr. Speaker, because Sergeant Bauer died in service to his country on January 10 in Iraq. He was a person that accepted the risk of his profession. His wife, Kari, accepted the risk of being a military spouse. And I simply want to honor his memory but not dramatize his memory because that would not be fitting to the soldiers that represent our great Nation.

And by honoring the sergeant and his wife, Kari, I also want to extend that honor to all of our military personnel that serve this Nation knowing the sacrifices that they make and that they may be asked to make the ultimate sacrifice and are willing to do that, for this is part of their job. They accept that.

Today I have a letter that I want to present as part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that we will be sending to Kari. But in this honoring of Justin Bauer and his wife, I also want to honor all of the military that serve this Nation and their families that make up the heart and soul of our Nation's spirit.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, February 25, 2009.

Mrs. KARI BAUER,
Moss Court,
Fayetteville, NC.

DEAR MRS. BAUER: I wish to once again convey my deepest condolences for the loss of your husband, Staff Sergeant Justin Bauer. My entire congressional staff also joins me at this time in sending our deepest sympathies and understanding during this period of bereavement.

Staff Sergeant Bauer served his country and the American people in the most honorable of ways. Staff Sergeant Bauer's absolute selfless service, professionalism and loyalty to country will continue to serve as the pinnacle for which we will continue to honor his service to our great nation. His leadership and "high regard" as viewed by his fellow Soldiers were so strongly conveyed to me in the words spoken at the memorial service.

I hope that time and memories will help lessen the burden of your sorrow, and that you may draw some measure of comfort knowing that others care and share in your loss. Please know that we have shared in your pain and sorrow and pay our final respects to undoubtedly one of our nation's best. If I can be of any assistance please contact my Washington, D.C. Office at (202) 225-3715 or in Fayetteville (910)-920-2070.

I also wanted you to know that I went on the floor of the U.S. House of Representatives today to offer my appreciation for the sacrifice that your husband made, the loss you endured. And that the two of you represent why our military and our military families are the heart and soul of our country. Thanks again to you and Justin.

Sincerely,

LARRY KISSELL,
Member of Congress.

WE NEED TO FOCUS ON OUR TRADE DEFICITS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, last night, President Obama said that in this time of economic insecurity, America must avoid the possibility of protectionism. My friends, where are the fearsome red-herring protectionists?

We all believe in free trade so long as it is fair trade, and I believe most of all in free trade among free people. Our Nation boasts the most open markets in the world, but one must recognize that America hasn't had a balanced trade account since 1975, yes, 1975.

That's 34 years of regression on the jobs and trade front, 34 years of wandering in the wilderness, 34 years of deluges of imports dwarfing our exports, 34 years of outsourcing our good jobs by the millions. Thousands of America's best companies have been sacrificed, Maytag, Trico, Playtex, Levis, Zenith, Georgia-Pacific, Champion Spark Plug. The list is endless.

Now we are watching major segments of our banking system disintegrate while we buy foreign televisions, foreign clothing, foreign automobiles, foreign food, all while our beautiful Nation begs China, undemocratic China, for money.

It's pretty clear we need to focus on our trade deficits as a causal factor in our other deficits. The human and economic tragedies continue to mount. The massive hemorrhage of U.S. wealth instructs us in its raw truth. So-called free trade agreements began in 1975. Back then we had a surplus of $12.4 billion in goods with the world. We have now sunk in 2008 to $677 billion in trade deficit, three-quarters of a trillion dollars, and all the lost jobs that go with it just disappear.

The evidence is all around us. Americans are working harder each year, increasing their productivity but then seeing no increased wages. More lost purchasing power, the dollar isn't worth as much. Their health and pension benefits, disappearing. This is not a recipe for a healthy economy, a strong nation or a middle class.

The challenge is trade is not a zero sum game. Other nations don't play by the same rules. Other nations manage their markets. Other nations manipulate their currency. Other nations aren't democratic and they have no rule of law.

Let's look at the raw facts, as ignoring our trade deficits won't help our Nation crawl out of our deep economic hole. Let's stop digging and start crawling out.

When you focus over a quarter of a century on more outsourcing of jobs and importing goods than on exporting goods and creating jobs here, our country ends up indebted and we are indebted to China, indebted to Mexico, indebted to Japan and all the other creditors who will be knocking on our grandchildren's doors.

When you conduct two wars and don't pay for them, you make it even worse. But not to recognize those two deficits, the trade deficit as well as the budget deficit, is to live in a world of delusion.

In 2008, our largest trade deficit was in oil with countries in the Middle East, and the bottom line is that that trade advantages them, not us.

If you look at overall trade between the United States, Canada and Mexico, that's governed by NAFTA, the North American Free Trade Agreement. We are now at record imports from both countries, not exports, record imports, $74.2 billion in the red with Canada last year and $63.5 billion in the red with Mexico.

The same is true with Communist China, where we are in a $266 billion deficit, a record high. Japan is no different, $72.6 billion there.

The top trade gap we continue to face is imported oil. Overall, the U.S. imported 3.6 billion barrels of crude oil in 2008 worth $342 billion, our chief strategic vulnerability.

Unemployment continues to rise nationally, over 7.2 percent, and in districts like mine and many counties over 12.5 percent. Dr. Peter Morici of the University of Maryland has written, "Lost growth is cumulative. Thanks to the record trade deficits accumulated over the last 10 years, the U.S. economy is about $1.5 trillion smaller. This comes out to about $10,000 per worker," and every American middle class family feels it.

How are we going to change this, Mr. President? America needs balanced trade accounts, not delusion. We need open markets, not closed markets. We need a rule of law, not undemocratic practices. We need realism, not delusion.

HONORING STAFF SERGEANT MARC J. SMALL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SESTAK) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SESTAK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a young American hero who has given his all in service to our Nation, a 1970 graduate of Methacton High School, Marc Small of Collegeville, Pennsylvania. He represented the very best of our community and country when he decided in 2003 to follow in the patriotic footsteps of his father, Sergeant Major Murray Small, U.S. Army, Retired, and he enlisted in our U.S. Army.

As importantly, in following his mother's compassionate and caring nature, he chose to become a medic with the Army Special Forces to assume the responsibilities of caring for his comrades in arms as well as some of the poorest people on this earth. As testament to his intelligence, motivation and courage, in less than 5 years this remarkable young man quickly rose to the rank of staff sergeant, learned the invaluable skills necessary to heal soldiers and civilians and earned the extraordinary honor of wearing the treasured "Green Beret."

Tragically, on February 12, 2009, at Faramuz, Afghanistan, Staff Sergeant Marc J. Small, of the 1st Battalion, 3rd Special Forces Group (Airborne) U.S. Army, succumbed to wounds sustained in combat. Before his life was cut short, this young warrior had treated hundreds of Afghani civilians and in the process displayed the very best of the American spirit and character.

By the loss of Staff Sergeant Marc J. Small we are a much lesser Nation and community, but only for the briefest of periods. Because given the very special nature of this healer and warrior, I am certain that from this tragedy other young men and women will be inspired by the heroism and selflessness of Staff Sergeant Small. From their skills, valor and compassion, the best traditions of our Nation will live on, as they must, for this world remains a very challenging place, and the need for our Nation to tend to the needs of poor and oppressed in many remote regions of the world is great.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that we take a moment to reflect on the service Staff Sergeant Marc Small has made on our behalf in making so much possible. We thank his mother, Mary MacFarland; his father, Sergeant Major Murray Small, U.S. Army, Retired; his stepfather, Peter MacFarland; his stepmother, Karen Small; his brother, Matt; sisters Heather MacFarland Wellock, Jennifer MacFarland and Megan MacFarland; stepbrothers Travis and Tyler Baney; and Amanda Charney, who Marc Small very deeply loved.

I join all of the constituents of Pennsylvania's Seventh Congressional District and good Americans everywhere when I pledge that the service and sacrifice of Staff Sergeant Marc J. Small, U.S. Army, will always be remembered and forever honored.

SECRETARY CLINTON'S SILENCE IN CHINA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, today the State Department released its annual Human Rights Report, an exhaustive report which documents the human rights abuses of countries worldwide.

The report highlights several disturbing global trends in the area of human rights and goes on to say that these trends "confirm the continuing need for vigorous United States diplomacy to act and speak out," and, yet, America's leading diplomat, Secretary of State Clinton, could not find it in herself to publicly press the Chinese Government on their human rights abuses during her recent visit.

Which begs the question, has the situation improved so dramatically so as to justify relegating human rights to the back burner? Was last year a banner year for the Chinese Government marked by tremendous reforms and greater freedom? Has a new day dawned for the people of China? The answer is no. We need look no further than the State Department's own report that came out today that says such notions could not be further from the truth and would be laughable if the reality of the situation wasn't so sobering.

A few excerpts from the report:

"The Government of China's human rights record remained poor and worsened in some areas. The government . . . tightly controlled freedom of speech, the press (including the Internet), assembly, movement and association."

"Authorities committed extrajudicial killings and torture, coerced confessions of prisoners, and used forced labor. In addition, the Chinese government increased detention and harassment of dissidents."

For people of faith, the situation was especially grim:

"Authorities disrupted church meetings and retreats; detained, beat, and harassed church leaders and church members."

"Harassment of unregistered Catholic bishops, priests, and laypersons continued, including government surveillance and detentions."

This is the State Department's report that came out today.

For North Korean refugees the report had this to say:

"Authorities stepped up efforts to locate, detain, and forcibly return North Koreans to North Korea," basically gulags where they will be persecuted.

On forced labor it said: "Forced labor remained a serious problem," and on and on. I am running because of the time.

For Tibet, here is what the report said:

"The government's human rights record in Tibetan areas of China deteriorated severely during the year. Authorities continued to commit serious human rights abuses, including torture, arbitrary arrest, extrajudicial detention," and then it goes on with much others.

The list goes on. I marvel that there can be such a disconnect between the systematic documented abuses of the Chinese government, the importance, as stated in the report, of the U.S. Government speaking out on behalf of those living under repression and the shocking silence of Secretary Clinton. The Chinese Government could barely contain their excitement about Secretary Clinton's silence.

AP reported that "China gave U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton a glowing review." No wonder they gave her a glowing review because she didn't say anything following her weekend visit, during which she steered clear of human rights issues.

China doesn't want our Secretary to speak on human rights, but that's the very reason why they should speak out on human rights.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, silence in itself is a message, not just to the Chinese Government but to the Chinese people whose struggles are outlined in grim details.

Martin Luther King said, and I quote, "In the end, we will remember not the words of our enemies, but the silence of our friends." For the Secretary of State to be silent on the issue of persecution in China, where there can be a number, can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, how a Catholic bishop, or a Buddhist monk or a Protestant pastor or a Muslim Uighur was in prison and the prison guards came around and said, "See, your Secretary of State was in town and she never even raised the issue."

The way to do this, Mr. Speaker, in ending, is the way Ronald Reagan did it in the eighties. Every time President Reagan would go or any Secretary of State would go to Moscow, or whatever, they would speak out on behalf of human rights. Our embassies were islands of freedom.

And so I ask the Secretary to make it clear: Is this a retreat on human rights? Did you just make a mistake? But the sound and the silence is reverberating, and it will also have an impact on dictators around the world because they will see the Secretary going to China and not speaking out. Ahmadinejad will do what he wants with regard to the Baha'is, Egypt will do what it wants with regard to the Coptic Christians and on and on, and the world will be a much more dangerous place.

REASONS FOR THE ECONOMIC DOWNTURN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. AKIN) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. AKIN. Mr. Speaker, through the period of the last 6 years, one of the things we have heard pretty commonly in the media has been the tremendous cost of the war in Iraq, and that every day we hear there are more and more millions being squandered on the war in Iraq. So it is an interesting fact to add up all of the spending in the war in Iraq and all of the spending in the war in Afghanistan and add it together. What you find is that there is less spending there than there was in the first 5 weeks of this new year, particularly with the new stimulus bill.

Well, how is it that we got into such a fix, into such a problem, that our economy seemed to dictate these kinds of draconian solutions? That story actually starts back some number of years. It goes back to the Carter administration, the Community Reinvestment Act and the idea that there were some people that couldn't get a decent home loan. So we were going to tell banks that they had to make some loans to people that were riskier, and maybe even risky enough that some of them couldn't make their loan payments.

That started under the Carter administration, but over a period of time we then developed a couple of organizations called typically Freddie and Fannie, Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae. Those organizations are neither quite government, but really not quite private either. Their objective was to create a source of innovative financing so that people could afford home loans and the average person could have a piece of the American Dream and own their own house.

Well, over a period of time Freddie and Fannie were established and they took more and more different loans, underwrote various loans for people's homes. By the time we got well through the Clinton years as President, President Clinton demanded that the Freddie and Fannie corporations, if you would call them corporations, had to change their rules, that they had to release more and more loans to people who in effect couldn't pay. So the percentage of these loans that were more marginal were increased.

In the meantime, you had some other things going on. You had the government policy under Greenspan. The Federal Reserve had reduced the interest rate down quite low to about 1 percent, so you had the money being flooded as we moved on with more and more very low priced capital at 1 percent, so people tended to think, hey, this is a pretty good idea. Let's put some of this money in the real estate market, because the real estate market started to boom. In fact, it was in a bubble.

When I came to Congress in 2001, real estate was starting to go up, and by the time 2004 or 2005 came, most of us around here that thought we knew a little bit about economics were kicking ourselves, how come we didn't buy the very biggest house we could possibly find and let the thing double and then quickly sell it.

Of course, there were a lot of people that were doing that. There was a lot of speculation going on. Speculators took advantage of the situation and real estate continued to expand and to expand. In the meantime, what was going on on Wall Street was the fact that because there really weren't any rules, Freddie and Fannie were quasi-governmental, it was assumed that they were going to back people up and back up these loans, and so it became kind of a free ride.

You had all kinds of mortgage brokers traveling around the country saying to people, hey, you want to get a loan? Well, how much do you need? Half a million dollars? Fine. I don't really care whether you have got a job or whether you can pay it back, because I am going to turn the loan right on over. It is going to go over to Freddie or Fannie or to the Wall Street market. They are going to chop it up in pieces, repack it and sell it all over the world.

So it was one of those situations where we made a very big mistake in terms of government regulation. And we allowed this process to continue to run for some number of years without the proper regulations and control on Freddie and Fannie. So most people have read and understand that what got us into this recession was the fact that we allowed a whole lot of mortgages being made by people who could not pay those mortgages back. So that is how things got started.

Now, you say, well, didn't somebody figure this out? Didn't somebody ring a warning bell or let us know that things weren't going the right way?

Well, in fact they did. What you have here, and this is an interesting day to remember, in The New York Times, not exactly a right-wing oracle, The New York Times, September 11th, 2003, you have reported there that the President, at the time President Bush, was asking for greater authority to regulate Freddie and Fannie because he believed that what was going on was going to cause a whole lot of trouble. There were all kinds of mortgages and loans being made where it was not at all clear that people would pay them back.

Of course, in the past years, many years before when somebody was going to get a home loan, you would go to your local bank and the banker would take a look and say, "I am not going to loan him money if I don't think he can pay it back." But what we did was we separated the person that was taking that loan, we separated him from the person that was getting the money, and the end result was there wasn't any accountability anymore. So the President said, hey, this is a big problem.

So you have September 11th, 2003, The New York Times. The President is saying in there, hey, we need to get some controls on these crazy mortgages that are going on, and he asked Congress to take action to regulate Freddie and Fannie.

At that time, or a year or so later, Congress and the House passed a bill to do that. It went to the Senate and it was killed by the Democrats in the Senate. But in that same article, September 11th, 2003, you have the words of the gentleman here in the House now who is in charge of rewriting the rules, and this is what he said about Freddie and Fannie. "These two entities, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, are not facing any kind of financial crisis, said Representative BARNEY FRANK of Massachusetts, the ranking Democrat on the Financial Services Committee." So the ranking Democrat on the Financial Services Committee is saying Freddie and Fannie are doing just fine, September 11, 2003. The President is saying we need more regulation, there are going to be problems. Then Congressman FRANK goes on, "The more people exaggerate these problems, the more pressure there is on these companies, the less we will see in terms of affordable housing."

Well, this doesn't look like very good prophesy here. Certainly this problem was caused by a lack of regulation. It was caused by the Democrat Party, as is reported in this article in The New York Times.

Now, there are people today who want to say that this is a failure of free enterprise. This has nothing to do with free enterprise. This has to do with socialistic government meddling in the real estate market and an unwillingness of the government to be responsible in what the government says it is going to back.

What has happened here is you have got Freddie and Fannie that could do anything they wanted, and we are supposed to, the taxpayer, you and I, are supposed to back up Freddie and Fannie when people make all of these lousy loans. So that is the quick run-down on how we got to where we are with the recession.

Now, when you have a recession, there are a couple different ways to handle a recession, a couple of theories. One of the theories is what FDR did back in the 1930s. Their idea was that if the government spends enough money it stimulates demand. Of course, everybody has been taught this for years in college economic classes, that if the government stimulates the economy by spending enough money, why, then it will just make the recession go away.

That sounds like a pretty cool idea, doesn't it? The government just spends more and more and more money and the economy is going to get better. The only trouble with that is if that really worked, where we have the amount of debt that we have at this time, trillions of dollars of debt, don't you think we would have a great economy?

So we have to ask, what is this theory? It was called Keynesianism. Little Lord Keynes was proposing this idea about the same time Henry Morgenthau, who was the Secretary of Treasury under FDR, was making this proposal. So we have had in the laboratory of history this idea of the government spending a whole lot of money to make the economy better. So we had a chance to do that for 8 years, and Henry Morgenthau tried this whole thing out.

At the end of 8 years, he appears before the House Ways and Means Committee and in 1939, and this is his quotation before the House Ways and Means Committee. "We have tried spending money. We are spending more than we have ever spent before, and it does not work. I say after 8 years, the administration, we have just as much unemployment as when we started, and an enormous debt to boot."

So this is the author, this is the first guy that tried this theory over in this country, just spend a whole lot of money to fix a recession, and he says it doesn't work. You take a look at the numbers and the tremendous amount of joblessness when they started, and when he got all done, they still had a whole lot of unemployment going on. And he said we have tried it and it doesn't work. Yet there are people who still want to hang onto this warmed-over Keynesian idea, and it doesn't work.

So, what does work? It is important for us to not be negative and just say what doesn't work, but what does work. And what does work is more of a supply side kind of model, and we are going to be talking about that in just a minute.

I am joined here on the floor by a very good friend and a gentleman who has lived a number of careers in this world, one as a medical doctor, a guy with a very bright mind, but also a U.S. Congressman from the State of Georgia. I would yield to the gentleman from the State of Georgia, Congressman BROUN.

Mr. BROUN of Georgia. Thank you, my friend. I appreciate your yielding. I want to just make a couple of comments.

One thing, we have a recent experiment in this kind of economic theory. I think if we look historically, not only did the idea of spending more and more money not work during the Great Depression, in fact the only thing that got us out of the Depression was cranking up the manufacturing sector, the private manufacturing sector, to supply the needs for World War II. That is the only thing that got us out of the Depression.

But I just want to remind you, I know my dear friend from Missouri, Mr. AKIN, remembers just recently the Japanese tried the same kind of philosophy. I don't think it worked there either, did it?

Mr. AKIN. I appreciate the gentleman and the additional point that you are making. I think it is a very persuasive point, because Henry Morgenthau tried this idea for 8 years and it didn't work worth a hoot. In fact, those were his words, we have a lot of debt to boot.

But in addition, we also had the Japanese. They tried it, and it basically was like taking an entire economic decade out of Japan. They had a whole lot of these tax-and-spend fellows over in Japan, and they just went at it hammer and tongs for 10 years. The Japanese economy bumped and bumped and bumped and it never could get off the ground. It is like the plane that didn't have enough propulsion to be able to pull it up in the air. And it was because of the fact that they were just sold on this idea that if they spent enough government money, something would be okay.

It kind of reminds me, I am an engineer by training and they probably shouldn't let us into a political body like this, but it reminds me of somebody grabbing their shoelaces, lifting up and trying to fly around the room.

This is just foolishness. I think most Americans, most of our constituents that are out there, I think they have to look at this idea and think what sort of funny stuff are those people smoking up in Washington, D.C. to think that when you get in hard times economically that what you are going to do is just spend money like mad. I don't think there is anybody in my district dumb enough that when they are in hard times economically they go and buy a brand new big car and spend money like mad thinking it is going to fix the problem. It is almost insanity to look at it that way.

The thing is, as well as the bad examples that we have, you have mentioned one of those, Congressman BROUN, we have good examples, good examples of the right way to solve the problem. It is not like we are just hopeless and we are in a graveyard spiral with an airplane and there is nothing you can do to fix it. The fact is, there are all kinds of examples of the right thing to do, and that is not the Keynesian model but it is more what people call today a supply side model.

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BROUN of Georgia. Thank you, and I appreciate that. Absolutely. I frequently say at home, as I am going around the 10th Congressional District in Georgia, that socialism has never worked; it won't work today, it has never worked in the past, and that is exactly what we are doing.

I described the stimulus bill that we passed here in this House a couple of weeks ago as a steamroller of socialism being shoved down the throats of the American public, and that will strangle our economy and kill the American people economically. I believe, likewise, that we are seeing bill after bill; in fact, just tomorrow we are going to have a housing bill here on the floor that is going to create bigger government and spend more money.

Certainly people need to be able to buy houses. People need to be able to buy cars. The Big Three auto makers are having problems. I have my own dealers at home that talk to me about the car sales. In fact, I visited one and talked to the service people, I talked to the used car people, I talked to the new car people, I talked to the folks across the board, and in a large dealership in the 10th Congressional District back during this last break, a week ago, and they're suffering. People are hurting around this country. And we need to do something. And there is absolutely something that can be done.

Republicans have proposed things that go along with what you're talking about tonight, the supply side, which means that we need to get dollars back in people's hands. We need to have small business be able to have the capital, money, to be able to create a new job, to be able to go out and buy inventory, to be able to do the things that they need to be successful as a small business. And that's the economic engine of America.

I was just watching "Fox and Friends." I guess two mornings ago, and the people there were talking about that the banks are the economic engines of America. They are totally misled. Small business is the economic engine of America.

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time for a minute. What I think I'm hearing you say was something that I just think it's so much common sense and so many Americans understand this. And it's about productivity, isn't it?

If you really look at, just look at your own life, and if you really want to do better, you become more productive. You produce more product. You're more efficient, and you get more stuff done, and therefore, you can earn more money that way. And that's the same thing. It's not like this is really complicated. You know, there's economists who would like to make it seem complicated so they get to keep that Ph.D. and have a nice job. But it's not that complicated.

When a business or an investor or an entrepreneur puts some money out and makes a good gamble or makes a good investment, it works well, or maybe it doesn't work quite right and then they adjust it a little bit, and then they come up with a better way of doing things, we call that productivity. And in order for that process to work, you have to have, just like oil inside a machine, you have to have a certain amount of liquidity and capital out there for these investors to be investing.

And so the whole logic of what you're saying is, you've got to prime the pump a little bit and let people keep some money so that they can invest it. And of course the thing that kills it is if you start to suck all the money out of the economy, now you don't have anybody investing, and so you start to run into this condition of joblessness. And we understand what that's like. There's all kinds of people.

Mr. BROUN of Georgia. You've got a great chart here. I know you're going to explain it to our viewers tonight and show pre-tax relief and post-tax relief. And the great thing—I'll stop here in a second, but the great thing about this chart that you're just fixing to explain is it shows that tax relief will stimulate the economy.

By getting the regulatory burden and the tax burden off of small business, we'll create jobs. We'll have a strong economy. People will have good-paying jobs so that they can buy a car, can buy a house, can pay for their college education for their children or technical education, they can do the things that they need, buy clothes, and all the things that come together to create a strong economy.

So if you would explain that chart for us, I'd appreciate it.

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time. What you're saying is that somehow or other people have trouble making this connection. But if you've got a business that's doing well, they hire people, and that makes jobs. Now, if you're jealous of the guy that owns the business, say you're too rich and I'm going to take you down a peg, and you take all the money away from everybody who owns businesses, then don't be surprised when you don't have as many jobs.

And so one of these things that people, you know, if they want to get real covetous and don't like their neighbor having a fancy-looking car in their driveway, think about it a little bit, because you're really a lot better off if you live in a neighborhood where there's a lot of businesses that are doing well than if you're in a neighborhood where everybody is unemployed. And you can't let it get you upset that somebody else is doing well if you really want jobs, because if you want to have a job you've got to work for somebody.

But anyway, let's take a look at this. The point of the matter is there's no reason for there to be doom and gloom in America. There's no reason for us to be really upset or kicking our lips around. There are ways to fix the problem we're in. We made some very, very foolish mistakes with poor government regulation and basically misguided socialism that put us into the recession. But it can be fixed. America has come through a lot of challenges, and this is another challenge, and we can do okay with this. But we can't do it by doing the wrong thing.

So what are the examples of what do you do in this situation? Well, here's an example. Actually, when I was here in Congress in 2001, when we started—and we did a bunch of tax cuts, and people thought tax cuts help make the economy do better. Well, but that's not entirely true. It's certain kinds of tax cuts that make the difference.

So here you have a picture of what's going on in 2001; this is the year that I came here, and you see we were in the recession. And before this tax relief, right here at this line in the second quarter of 2003, we did a particular kind of tax cut which had a very strong effect. But going before that, we did some tax cuts here, and we still had an average GDP of 1.1 percent. So it wasn't just any tax cut. You just want to send a $1,000 check to everybody in America, people like it, but it's not going to fix the situation that we are in. No, you have to use your tax money wisely.

So what did we do? In the second quarter of 2003, we did a dividend capital gains tax cut, and we took it from—it had been quite a lot higher—we took it down to 15 percent. And when we did that, let's take a look at what happened. Now, the effect of that, of course, is dividends capital gains is not something that just helps everybody on the street. This is something that really affects people who own businesses, particularly, or people who own money, and you want them to get the money freed up so they will use it to invest and create this productivity.

So here's what happens. We do the tax cuts second quarter 2003. Look at what happens to gross domestic product. We're chugging along at 1.1, it's kind of spotty, and all of a sudden it jumps to 3. And this is going all the way over to 2007. So the effect—now, you could say, well, is that what caused that? Well, if you take a look at this point in history, this is the main thing we did economically.

So you say, well, does that show up anywhere else? In fact, it does show up in some very, very important places. Let's take a look at the second chart, which is what we're very concerned with today, and that is the problem of job creation. These are all—all the lines going down are jobs that are lost, and so we're losing jobs at an average of almost 100,000 jobs a month. That's what's happening, 100,000 jobs a month being lost.

Now, these lines going up are where we actually had some job creation. But this is an average here. Now, we do this tax cut, and take a look at what happens on the right side in terms of the gain of jobs: 147,000 jobs a month being gained with this one particular cut.

So this isn't rocket science. We did it before. JFK did it. Ronald Reagan did the same kind of thing. And here we go, right in our recent past we did the same thing, and look what's going on.

Now, here's the last thing. Let's say that you really do, as my friend from Georgia was just saying, using the word "socialism." Let's say you really are a happy little socialist and you really want the government to slot money around and redistribute wealth and everything. If you want to do that, one thing you want is a good economy because it gives you more money to play with.

Look what happened here. This is Federal revenues. Federal revenues are going down, just as they've been going down this year because the economy's in bad shape. You turn the economy around with the right kind of tax cut, and take a look at revenues. They're jumping.

So this says everybody wins when the economy is doing well, and this supply side kind of idea of letting money be invested by the productive private sector, just as my friend from Georgia was saying, this is what works.

And there's no reason for Americans to be out of work if we just do the right thing. Instead, what we're doing is we're going to allow this tax cut to expire, and the math that drove these charts is going to go into reverse, and it's going to make the situation worse even than what it is right now.

I yield to my good friend from Georgia.

Mr. BROUN of Georgia. Well, you're exactly right, Mr. AKIN. And I think we're going to see a marked reversal in job creation as the capital gains tax goes higher. In fact, I'd like to remind my colleague, back when, in the last Congress, Republicans and Democrats alike had an alternative plan to the, what I call the Wall Street bailout bill, the TARP fund bill, the Troubled Assets Relief Program, where we were promoting not only not allowing the capital gains tax—keeping it from expiring, but we were promoting lowering that, change the accounting principles that froze all the economic markets. And I fault Hank Paulson, Secretary Paulson, frankly, for not even letting our bill touch his lips or come across his throat. And nobody on the majority side would consider our bill.

We had a plan that would not borrow from our grandchildren, like the TARP funds, Wall Street bailout bill did. Republicans have had a plan, actually, for a stimulus that would have actually stimulated the economy when we passed the stimulus bill a couple of weeks ago. And then now, just today, we voted on a bill that I think is going to exacerbate—that's a medical word that means "make it worse." But it's going to make the problem worse for the American family.

In fact, I hope that President Obama will fulfill his promise he made to the American people. He said that he did not want to—he would not sign a bill that had earmarks in it. This bill today had over 9,000 earmarks in it. Last night he said that the stimulus bill didn't have any earmarks in it, and that's not factual either. That's totally false.

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time. There is a little bit of a gap between the rhetoric and what's actually going on here, isn't there? And so what you've made reference to is—and this is easy for people to get it confused a little bit because this has been happening so rapidly.

The end of last year, we had basically a Wall Street bailout bill at $700 billion. That is a lot of money. That puts us into uncharted territory. I know you voted against it. I voted against it. And the reason we voted against it was because it wasn't going to work. Quite simply, it was not going to work. We spent $350 billion of that, came back, and people said, where's the transparency? What happened? You know, this thing hasn't been working very well.

And then, on top of $700 billion, just this last week, or week before last, we spent another 800-something billion dollars. At least in the House it was 840. They backed it off a small amount. Now, when you put $700 billion, $800 billion together, we're talking some change, aren't we?

I notice we're joined by another doctor—this must be doctors night—from Georgia over in the Chamber, my good friend, Dr. GINGREY, Congressman GINGREY. I just would yield some time to you.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman from Missouri yielding. And I will say that every night is doctors night.

It's always fun to be on the floor, of course, talking about issues like this. It's so important to the American people. And of course I know you've been talking about the economic "spendulous" bill that's already passed, already signed into law by President Obama.

And now today, of course, we vote on this omnibus bill, I think nine categories of spending. They were sort of left over, wasn't it, from 2008, from the last Congress, the last fiscal year. This should have been done and completed by October 1st. The end of the fiscal year was September 31, 2008. And here we have these nine spending bills that we throw into one big package, makes it extremely confusing.

So it is important, I think, for Members to come to the floor, Mr. Speaker, to explain to both Republicans and Democrats, really what we did here today.

And, of course, this bill passed. It certainly didn't pass with our vote and our support. And the thing that I want to point out—and maybe you've already said this, but if you have, it's okay, because we can't say it often enough. The fact that, without considering the economic stimulus package, the trillion dollars that's going to help the economic recovery bill, without considering that, we have increased discretionary spending over 2008 levels.

And I have a chart to show it. We have increased discretionary spending by 7½ to 8 percent. And I'm pretty sure I'm right on this, Mr. Speaker. This was the largest increase in discretionary spending since the Carter administration. We have not had an overall 8 percent increase in discretionary spending in recent years, certainly not ever during the Bush administration, during his 8 years.

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time for just a minute, I'd like to highlight what you just said.

Because a lot of times what we hear our opponents, the Democrats, saying is, "Well, you don't have an idea. You don't have a plan. What's your idea? You're just always saying negative things about ours." Well, that's not true.

I mean, just starting with what we did today, the number I saw was that there was an 8 percent increase in a whole series of categories, an 8 percent increase. Now, the average household in my district has not had an 8 percent increase this year in their paychecks, and yet the government is going to push this 8 percent. So let's be specific. I don't want to be negative here. I would like to say positive things.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. If the gentleman would yield.

Mr. AKIN. I will yield.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the story is much worse. We are at 8, 8-0. 8.0 percent is bad enough as I tried to point out, but let me actually show this chart that I will hold up to my colleagues. I thank my physician colleague for helping me with the poster.

This in the blue shows the amount of spending for each one of these categories in this omnibus bill—Agriculture, Commerce, Justice, Energy, Water, Financial Services, Interior, Legislative branch, Labor-HHS, State, Foreign Ops, and Transportation-HUD. This is in the blue—what we had spent in billions in fiscal year 2008. This is already enacted. The red is what we did today. Let's just take these nine categories and look, Mr. Speaker, very closely. On Agriculture, we increased spending over '08 by 45 percent, Commerce and Justice by 41 percent, Energy and Water by 151 percent, and on and on and on.

You might say, "Well, wait a minute now. You just said the overall increased spending was 8 percent." What we need to understand is, in this economic stimulus package, much of that money was in these categories that should have been enacted under regular order. When we do these appropriations bills and we go through subcommittee and committee in regular order, that money—much of that—was in these different categories that had nothing to do, really, with job creation or very little to do with job creation. When you add that money out of the economic stimulus package to these categories, it's not 8 percent. I say to the gentleman from Missouri it is 80 percent—8-0 point, 80 percent.

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time, you make an excellent point. So what's really going on here is there are two bills that are influencing those categories that you show on your bar graphs.

The first bill you call the "spendulous." I'm maybe not quite so kind. I call it the "porkulous." They've rather nothing to do with job creation at all. They had to do with a whole lot of expansion of government programs and government spending.

So, first of all, we took this about $800 billion. Now let's just stop for a minute and put that into perspective. One of the things that's really big that we buy, if you want to think of big things, is aircraft carriers. We have eleven aircraft carriers in our Navy, and we protect them. We put ships around them. We don't want people to sink our aircraft carriers because they're expensive. Now, if you take the average cost of our eleven aircraft carriers and divide this into these porkulous or spendulous bills, you've got 250 aircraft carriers. I mean I don't know if that would go all the way across the State of Georgia or not, but those are a lot of aircraft carriers—250 of them—when we only have eleven in the Navy. Now, if you want to get you one of them Cadillac kind of aircraft carriers, the extra long version with the super electronics and better planes and all, well now, you'll only get 100-and-some aircraft carriers.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. If the gentleman would yield, with that number, if you put them end to end, that could go from Pearl Harbor to Wake Island.

Mr. AKIN. Yes. Reclaiming my time, you could also look at it from this point of view, which would be that the interest we pay on that amount of money in this porkulous bill would buy nine new aircraft carriers every year, just the interest on that money, or you could look at it another way. You could say all we've been hearing about is how expensive the war in Iraq is. Well, add up every day of the war in Iraq. Add it all together. We're talking way more money in the first 5 weeks than what we spend in Iraq. In the House version, you've put Iraq and Afghanistan together, and it's still more money. So this is a pretty good chunk of change.

What you're saying, gentlemen, is that a lot of that had nothing to do with jobs. It was just putting more money into government programs. So the chart that you show there didn't really show an 8 percent increase. What it really showed was way up there. What did you say? I'll yield. What was the actual number when you added it up?

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Well, reclaiming my time, of course the amount of money, I think, that we were spending in this bill, just in the omnibus, was $410 billion, but I think that it's something like $300 billion additional. Anyway, overall, it brings it up to 80 percent.

You know, you wonder. We heard from the President last night in his semi State of the Union Address, and he talked about, you know, fiscal responsibility in this budget that he's going to present to us on Thursday for 2010 and how it's going to be very fiscally responsible and belt-tightening. He has an opportunity, colleagues—doesn't he?—to veto this omnibus. This is his first opportunity. What can he say?

I mean we were criticized by the Democratic—now majority—when they were in the minority. President Bush didn't veto one spending bill, and on many occasions what came out of the Congress was a plus-up from what former President Bush had asked for. So the argument was, if you Republicans are fiscally responsible, why wouldn't your President veto this spending bill? In the first place, why did you plus them up? Here the Democrats said, "Well, you bring us in, and we're going to change all of that." Here is the very first opportunity. Well, I challenge President Obama:

Veto this sucker. Send it back, and say, "You know, we don't need an 80 percent increase in discretionary spending." As you've pointed out, Mr. AKIN, much of that spending will be there 10 years from now.

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time, what you're really saying is what we passed on this floor today, in and of itself, was an 8 percent increase, and that 8 percent increase is the biggest we've had in these categories since Carter was President, but that 8 percent is deceiving because you can add to it all of the stuff in the porkulous bill or a lot of what was in the porkulous bill, and that's going to run it up to an 80 percent increase. So what we're really talking about is a massive increase in government programs.

I see my other doctor friend, Congressman BROWN, from Georgia. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Well, thank you, Mr. AKIN. I just want to point out something here, too.

As Dr. GINGREY has come on the floor, he and I have the mutual thought that President Obama has promised the American people that he would veto any bill that had earmarks in it. I call upon the President to veto this bill that we passed today. It has over 9,000 earmarks in it.

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time, gentlemen, I heard it was 7,500 earmarks.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Well, whatever.

Mr. AKIN. He said, if it has earmarks in it, he's going to veto it, but what do you think they'll say—that those really aren't earmarks? Those things that look like earmarks and that smell like earmarks aren't earmarks? Is that what we're going to hear?

I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. You don't know what he's going to say. We heard last night that that porkulous bill as you and I call it—I call it a steamroll of socialism being shoved down the throats of the American public. He said last night in his State of the Nation Address that there were no earmarks in that bill. The whole non-stimulus bill was earmarks. It was payback to all of the liberal folks who supported him and who supported our Democratic majority.

But the point I wanted to make is that we hear from our friends on the left that Republicans don't have any ideas or that they're old ideas. The thing is that that's absolutely false in itself. Just on today's bill, I offered an amendment that the Democrats would not take that actually cut the discretionary spending out of this bill by 10 percent. American families are cutting their budgets. They're hurting.

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time, you offered an amendment. It said we want to cut 10 percent out of this bill. When you made that amendment, did you bring that amendment to the floor, and did you have a chance to vote on it?

I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Well, no, they wouldn't let it. Now, the thing is we heard from the leadership on the Democratic side that we were going to have a new era of openness and fairness, but we weren't allowed any amendments. The Rules Committee ruled that this was going to be a closed rule, that they wouldn't accept my amendment or any others. The Republican party had another amendment to just freeze spending across the board, not increase it, just not bring this bill to the floor, just continue to have another continuing resolution to continue current spending for the rest of this budget year. That wouldn't be considered.

We've brought plan after plan, project after project. We've brought forth to the Democratic majority many ideas that would stimulate the economy, that would create jobs, that would leave money in the hands of the people as well as small business, that wouldn't borrow from our grandchildren, but the Democratic majority won't even consider those things, and they've totally shut us out.

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time, gentlemen, I see my congressional friend from Georgia.

Dr. GINGREY, I yield to you.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Mr. AKIN, thank you. I just wanted to add to what Dr. BROWN was saying as to that continuing resolution amendment.

In other words, let's just stay at 2008 levels, the ones that we showed in the blue on this chart. Let's just stay right there. Dr. BROWN was explaining that amendment. In that amendment, if we did that—and I'll ask Dr. BROWN or I'll ask Representative AKIN—how many earmarks would be in that?

I'll go ahead and answer that before I yield back my time. The answer is it would be a big nada, zero, none. There would be no earmarks.

Now, some Members don't ask for earmarks. I've probably got six or eight earmarks. I have, you know, transparent, light of day, good things for my district that have been vetted thoroughly, but that would wipe out all of my earmarks, and those other 7,500 or 9,000, whatever the number is, I'm fine with that, and I think my constituents, in the interest of fiscal responsibility, would be fine with it as well.

So I think that's a point that we needed to make, and I yield back.

Mr. AKIN. So, reclaiming my time, what we're saying is one simple solution would be to freeze the discretionary budget. That would probably be the first step of a supply side solution to get the economy going, wouldn't it, if we'd just simply freeze discretionary spending? Then if what we did was we allowed certain selective tax increases in a very short period of time, you'd see the stock market jump, and you'd see jobs being created, and the whole economy would start to move again.

I mean this isn't something that's too complicated. It's just several of us talking this evening. There are a number of ways it could be done. It's not that complicated.

One of the places that you might start would be with the fact that the corporate income tax in America is the second highest in the world. You could get rid of all of the little bells and whistles in that corporate tax and just knock it back a good number of percent, and that in and of itself could have a great influence in creating jobs. If you on top of that were to freeze the government spending and were also to maintain dividend and capital gains, I don't know how many months it would be, but you'd see a neck-snapping turnaround. There are solutions to these problems, and the fact of the matter is that the people who are in charge now are unwilling to look at those solutions.

I yield back to Dr. GINGREY.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Well, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Again, I would just make the point that the President is a fantastic speaker, and he absolutely can talk the talk as good as anybody, certainly as any President whom I can remember going way back to JFK. Yet he has not had the opportunity to prove that he can walk the walk. I hope he can. I don't have any reason to think that he can't, but he does have an opportunity—doesn't he, my colleagues?—with this omnibus bill that was passed on the floor of this House today. President Obama has an opportunity to show that he can walk the walk.

Now, if he's not willing to veto this, what possibly could be his excuse? Would he say, "Well, you know, this was something that happened in 2008" or "this was a fiscal year 2009 budget, and it really is leftover business, and it's not my problem. It's somebody else's problem"? You know, that would be like an off-duty fireman walking in the streets of New York, coming upon a fire and having a hose there and a truck and saying, "Look," you know, "I'm not on duty. It's not my responsibility, and I'm not going to put the fire out." Hey, he's the fireman and chief. It's his responsibility to put the darned fire out, and he has got an opportunity to do it. He needs to walk the walk.

Mr. AKIN. Well, reclaiming my time, I guess what can happen down here—and we should guard against this—is we can get a little cynical. I believe it was the week before last that this House unanimously passed a resolution that was saying that we were going to have 48 hours to take a look at this 1,000-page bill that was coming down the pike.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. On the Internet.

Mr. AKIN. We were going to have 48 hours because there were 1,000 pages, and there were all kinds of things in there. Doesn't it make sense to allow the staff and different people to read over it before they take the vote? Everybody said "yes," so we voted unanimously for 48 hours.

The bill comes out. We get our first copy at 11:30 on Thursday night, and of course we have lots of staffers sitting around the office, waiting at 11:30 at night. The next day, we went straight to a vote on this.

And we're told that this is going to be transparency and openness, and it does tend to make you a little bit cynical when we say one thing and we do something else.

Now, the promise has been made here, if there's an earmark, we're going to veto it. Now, do any of you want to make any bets as to what's going to happen to this little puppy?

I don't mean to cause you trouble, Congressman BROWN.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Well, in Georgia, in my part of the woods, we say, "That's hogwash," the claims that we hear.

We've heard rhetoric, both from the President as well as the leadership in this House, about fairness. Well, they're not being fair to Republicans with the closed rule so we can't present our ideas and all.

But the thing is, it's not only not fair to Republicans, it's not fair to the men and women of America. It's not fair to the working families of America. It's not fair to the small business of America. Because we're being overrun with this socialistic idea that's going to destroy jobs, it's going to create more economic problems, just as we saw during the Great Depression.

All the great spending, all the big growth of Federal Government that we're seeing just markedly grow with these "porkulous" bills—the Wall Street bail-out bill, the non-stimulus stimulus bill we had 2 weeks ago, the bill we have today, and we're going to get another one tomorrow, and we're going to see more and more and more. And the thing is, it's not fair to the American people because what we're doing is we're killing our economy.

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time.

The American people, in a way, have a way to vote. The people that have money vote on the stock market, and the stock market has been saying, "We're not buying all of this stuff that's coming out of Congress. We're not convinced." And the stock market, every time we do another one of these massive spending bills, the stock market goes down even farther. So that's some kind of an indication that all is not well.

I yield to my friend from Georgia.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, all is not well. And we're not talking about our physical health here, but we're talking about our economic health. And, indeed, it will lead to poor physical health because people will be so frustrated and anxious and depressed.

One of our colleagues on our side of the aisle, a gentleman from Kansas, TODD TIAHRT, I spoke to Representative TIAHRT earlier today, Mr. Speaker, and he asked me if I would like to sign on to a bill that he is going to introduce in the next couple of days that said, look, we're not going to have any more stimulus, any more emergency bailout, rescue packages, whether we're talking about General Motors or Chrysler or AIG or Bear Stearns or Bank of America—you know, I could go on and on.

TODD TIAHRT is a strong fiscal conservative, and I said, "Man, I'm so glad you're doing that," because, as the gentleman from Missouri was just saying, the one thing the stock market hates is uncertainty. And we have had nothing but uncertainty since the beginning of this 111th Congress, and they don't know what to expect. So people keep thinking, well, am I going to buy a Bank of America stock at $4 a share when, the next bit of bad news comes out of Washington, it will be $2 a share? And that's exactly what's happening.

So I say "hurrah" to TODD TIAHRT, and I hope his bill will see the light of day.

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time.

One of the things that strikes me and is of great concern to me is something that I believe was in the dustbin of history in our thinking for many years now, and that was the old Soviet Socialist Republic, the USSR. If you think back before the Berlin Wall fell—some of us are old enough to remember—that was a formidable—and we were concerned about the USSR, but we didn't ever believe that its economics were any good because we knew they were a bunch of socialists over there. That's what the "USSR" part was all about. So, in a way, when we saw the Berlin Wall come down, we could kind of catch our breath, but we kind of laughed at them as saying, "See, we knew that old socialism wasn't going to work."

And what was that country based on? The basic assumption was that the government is going to provide you what? Well, I guess one of the first things would be the government's going to provide you with education. And then another thing the government's going to provide is health care, which I know, as a couple of medical doctors, this is something that we know a little bit about when the government decides to get in the health care business. And then, of course, we're going to have the government provide you with food and housing, you see. And then the government's going to give you a job.

And that was the heart—aside from being just sort of antireligious, the USSR, that was the heart of their program. The government is going to do all of this stuff.

And now, just a few weeks ago, the cover of a major news magazine in America, it says, "We're All Socialists Now." When I saw that, I felt a little frustrated, because I'm not a socialist. And the people I represent are not socialists. And they didn't like socialism, and they don't want the government running everything in their lives.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Joe the Plumber is not a socialist either. It's all about that income redistribution. You remember that phrase?

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time

One of the things that's of concern is that if we follow in the path of the model that doesn't work, the Soviet Union, with the government trying to run all of these things, the government is terribly inefficient. People may think and complain to you doctors that medicine is awfully expensive today. Well, if they think medicine is expensive today, let them get a snout full of what it's like when the government runs it, with all of that efficiency. About half of the health care dollars in America are already going through the government, and that's part of what's made it less efficient and expensive.

So if we move in the direction of what I'm reading, if you read between the lines of the speech last night, we're talking about a single-payer system like Canada. And the bill that we passed already has the language in it saying the government can ration your health care, and I don't think that makes for good quality health care.

Mr. BROUN of Georgia. As a physician, let me tell you, it's not going to. Government regulation is what's driving up the cost of health care markedly.

When I was practicing medicine down in rural south Georgia, as a good example, Congress passed CLIA, the Clinical Laboratory Improvement Act. I had a lab with quality control because I, as a physician, wanted to make sure that any lab test I did was accurate. We spent a lot of time, energy, and money making sure that those tests were accurate.

Well, CLIA shut down my lab. If somebody came in to see me with a red sore throat, had white patches on the throat, running a fever, aching all over, I would do a CBC, a complete blood count, to see if they had a bacterial infection and thus needed antibiotics, like penicillin, or if they had a viral infection. Both clinical pictures could be exactly the same. Even allergies will present with the same clinical picture, even the fever.

So I would do this simple blood test. I charged $12 for the test. CLIA shut my lab down. I had to send my patients over to the local hospital, and they charged $75. I could do the test in 5 minutes. It would take 2 to 3 hours to get the results from the local hospital.

Now, what did that do across the whole of the spectrum of health care? It markedly drove the cost of—insurance and all health care markedly were elevated because of that.

And Congress, not long ago, passed HIPAA. I call all of these things "critters," and if you see a critter coming down the pike, you better hold on to your wallet because it's going to take a big bite out of it. But HIPAA has cost the health care industry billions of dollars and hasn't paid for the first Aspirin to treat the headaches that it's created.

So if we get the regulatory burden off of health care and we let the doctor-patient relationship be how health care decisions are made, we can literally lower the costs. But this "porkulous" bill is a giant push towards socialist medical care here in America, too. So it gives me great concern for me and for my physician colleagues, but it even gives me more concern for my patients.

It's been said around here, if you think medicine is expensive now, wait until it's free and provided for by the government. We're going to have terrible quality or degradation of quality of health care. We're not going to have the innovation. We're not going to be developing the new drugs and procedures that we're doing today on the free enterprise system, and it's going to be disastrous.

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time.

I appreciate you being a medical doctor. You've seen first-hand examples where government intervention in the marketplace is driving up costs for everybody. And the more areas we get into—just like the Soviet Union, when we get into food and clothing and housing and education, the more the government gets its nose into all of those areas, and the size of the government grows, as we've just seen—it wasn't just 8 percent today, but you add the 8 to all of that before from the "porkulous" bill, we're talking about a massive increase in government.

And the Republicans did make some mistakes. We spent more money than we should have, but it's nothing on the scale of what we're talking about here.

We're joined by a very distinguished colleague of mine from Louisiana. And, Congressman SCALISE, we'd appreciate if you could join us.

And I yield time.

Mr. SCALISE. Thank you. I want to thank the gentleman from Missouri. What we've been talking about is the concern that a lot of us have with the runaway spending we have here in Washington.

And as we all sat in this Chamber last night and listened to the President, there were a number of things he said that I think we all agreed with. One of the things that he harped on was the concern about adding more money, billions and trillions of dollars, to the national debt, and I share that concern.

But I think what's even of more concern is that, if we look at what's happened in these last 6 weeks, we've seen not a reduction in spending, not a reduction in debts, we've seen a dramatic increase. In fact, in just the last 6 weeks since Barack Obama has been President, we've seen over $2 trillion added to the national debt. That's a 20 percent increase in the national debt. And that's the burden that our children and our grandchildren are going to have to inherit.

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time for a minute.

You're saying a 20 percent increase in the national debt. So you add up all of the national debt since the country was born, you put that all together, and you're saying we added 20 percent to that in a period of 6 weeks?

Mr. SCALISE. In a period of 6 weeks between the spending bill that was passed and signed into law last week, added $800 billion in new government spending—not a bill to help stimulate our economy; a bill to massively grow the size of government, many programs, as you discussed, that are permanent programs, not one-time infrastructure spending.

The other thing—and tomorrow there will be a bill filed; the President will be presenting his new budget. The expectations of what we're hearing is that that budget will be over $1 trillion out of balance. More money added to the national debt.

And on top of that, a bill that a lot of us that are concerned about this runaway spending voted against, but a bill that passed today was this omnibus bill: $400 billion of additional spending, representing an 8 percent increase in government spending at a time when States and families across this country are cutting back their spending because of tough economic times. Seems like Washington's the only place going on a spending spree.

It's hard to picture when yesterday you hear somebody talking about the dangers of adding more money to the national debt, ironically on Mardi Gras day, and it seems like today and tomorrow, when these bills are filed, adding trillions more debt, it seems like the same people are trying to act like the King of Carnival, throwing beads and trinkets to people with more government spending.

This was a picture that was actually in the New Orleans newspaper yesterday on Mardi Gras Day, and it talked about and it shows people throwing money, literally throwing money from a float. And it's titled "Stimulus," and they said, "We'll worry about the hangover tomorrow."

And the sad part of it is, it's not our money that they're throwing. It's not only the taxpayers' money, but it's our children and grandchildren's money that they're throwing, because this is money we don't have. This is money that's going to go out and be printed up on a printing press because we don't have that money sitting in a bank somewhere.

And so it adds more money—over 20 percent in 6 weeks has been added to the national debt. And that's the burden our children and grandchildren will inherit. And this has to end.

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time.

You're talking about, in the last 6 or 7 weeks, we have added 20 percent to the debt. And yet, when you take a look at the money that we've spent, it's not going to do any good to help us with joblessness, it's not going to get the economy going, it just is flat not going to work. Because we can already see that it didn't work when you used the same approach during the "Raw Deal" or the New Deal. Henry Morgenthau says it won't work. He's the guy that engineered the plan. He says it won't work. And the Japanese tried it, and it didn't work for them. And yet we have solutions to the problem that will work which are being ignored.

You know, gentlemen, one of the things that I think we have to be careful of: We are in a very difficult time in America right now, and a lot of people recognize that.

And we'll have to continue this next week on Wednesday. And I really appreciate my good friend from Louisiana joining us, Congressman SCALISE.

30-SOMETHING WORKING GROUP

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. MURPHY) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. Madam Speaker, we are here to convene what has unfortunately become a little bit more infrequent in this legislative session, our 30-Something Working Group. We're so glad that the Speaker of the House has once again convened the 30-Something members of the Democratic Caucus to work on issues affecting not only our generation of Americans who are struggling like everyone else with this very difficult economy, but also on behalf of all Americans who are crying out right now to the Obama administration, to this Congress, to both Democrats and Republicans, to step up to the plate and help them start making ends meet.

And we're going to be here today with my colleague, Mr. ALTMIRE—hopefully we will be joined a little bit later by one of our new members of the 30-Something Caucus, Mr. BOCCIERI—to discuss really what I think is becoming a historic moment in this Nation's history as President Obama challenges this Congress and this Nation to do two things; to step up to the plate and enact short-term stimulus to create jobs in this country, to put people back to work, to make banks start lending again, and to get our economy recovering, but also to do something else; to recognize that this economy has been imperiled for a very long time by a weak energy policy, by a crippling health care system with rising costs, and a relative lack of investment in education compared to those countries that we compete with. And his challenge to us last night was to do what we need to do now and to come together to rebuild this economy in the short term, but also in the long term.

Now, Madam Speaker and my colleagues, I got to hear just the end of the presentation of our colleagues who spoke before us on the floor. And it is, I think, amazing to many of us to see this newfound interest on behalf of the Republicans on this floor of the issue of fiscal responsibility and deficit reduction.

As President Obama pointed out last night, this administration has inherited the largest debt in the history of this Nation. Coming after the Bush administration, which took a national debt from $4 trillion to nearly $10 trillion, who racked up more debt for this Nation in one administration of 8 years than every single other President combined, that's what this Congress inherits.

The Republicans who controlled this House for 12 years sat by idly as our children and our grandchildren were put in hock. They ignored the growing weakness of our health care system and the burden that it placed on small businesses. They ignored the fact that our energy system was being held hostage by those who produce oil and gas overseas. And they let our education system and our investments therein wither away, as Head Start got cut, as special education funding got cut, as higher education and financial aid funding got cut. And all of a sudden we woke up overnight to the fact that our economy was in great peril and that we owed $10 trillion to the rest of the world.

For 8 years, the Republicans and the President stood here on the floor of this House and down Pennsylvania Avenue in the White House and allowed all of this to happen, meanwhile, pursuing a system of vast deregulation and laissez-faire policies on Wall Street, which then ultimately created the crisis that occurred last summer. A lack of investment in health care reform, an inattention to energy policy, and a withdrawal from education investment combined with a strategy of whatever Wall Street wants Wall Street gets, and we find ourselves where we are today.

So I appreciate hearing from our Republican friends that now we should start paying attention to the debt. We absolutely should. And President Obama set a mission before us last night to halve the American deficit in the next 4 years. We're going to accept that challenge. But the fact is that the Republicans are Johnny-come-latelies to this debate. We wouldn't be in the situation that we are today if we had had more friends on the Republican side of the aisle who practiced what they preached when it came to fiscal responsibility.

It's the very reason why Mr. ALTMIRE and Mr. BOCCIERI and myself are here. We were sent to Congress to fix this mess. We were sent here to represent districts that were represented by Republicans for a very long time because people in our districts are waking up to the notion that if they really cared about the debt that was being levied on their kids, that maybe it wasn't the Republican Party that was best to carry that banner.

We're going to talk about positive steps that this country and this Congress can take from here on out to start lessening that burden. We're going to tighten our belts, we're going to get our revenue and expenditure policy straight, we're going to start stimulating this economy again. We're going to talk about positive things. And I bet you there is going to be plenty of opportunity for Republicans and Democrats to agree on that. But I think we should also agree on what the history of this institution is and the fact that this President and this Democratic Congress inherited an absolute fiscal mess from the Republicans.

So I appreciate the charts and the graphs and the Newsweek covers and the political cartoons that get brought up here in the Republican Special Orders, but there is a certain amount of revisionist history that's happening here. And the 30-Somethings have always been about trying to talk about how we can move forward, but also about making the record very clear for the American people. And I think it is appropriate that we do a little bit of both today, that we talk about our path forward—the very difficult one that we are going to have to chart—but we also make it very clear what the division is on these issues and what our history has been, Mr. ALTMIRE.

Mr. ALTMIRE. And I thank the gentleman from Connecticut. And the gentleman is absolutely correct on a number of points. He mentioned that he came to this Chamber for this discussion just as the previous group was wrapping up. I had been here a little bit longer and got to hear some of what they had to say, Mr. MURPHY and Madam Speaker.

Mr. MURPHY mentioned that we have a Republican Party that is joining the debate and having the discussion. I didn't hear a whole lot of joining the debate going on. I heard a lot of, as the gentleman from Connecticut said, revisionist history. And one of the items of revisionist history that I'm most intrigued by that you hear not just during these Special Order debates, but from talk show hosts around the country, and others, is the revisionist history that Franklin Roosevelt had nothing to do with the recovery that took place after the Great Depression. I don't recall learning that in school when I was growing up. I don't recall that talking point being a part of the discussion. But now we're hearing a lot about, well, the New Deal really didn't work, and nothing that was accomplished by that administration solved any of the issues that they inherited during the Great Depression.

And I think about that when I hear some of the discussion that our colleagues on the other side bring to these Special Orders. And many of them have become friends and colleagues and people that I admire. But the discussion that I hear, I wouldn't consider that to be a debate. I don't think that we're hearing good faith efforts to reach compromise and to work together. I think what we're seeing is a lot of finger pointing. I think we're seeing a lot of blame being cast around and a lot of passing the buck because, as Mr. MURPHY said, we have not yet heard anyone own up to the fact that this Nation is in the economic crisis that it is in today because of the policies of the very recent past. And we can point fingers and we can cast blame, and that's not what this is about, that's not what we're doing today.

But it is instructive to think about how we got to where we are. And when you hear prescriptions being put forward for getting us out of this incredibly deep ditch that we find ourselves in, the people who are bringing forward these prescriptions have a record, they have a record of success or not. So I think the reason it's instructive to look at the decisions that were made in this Congress that led us to where we are today, when you hear people stand on the floor and say, here's my point of view, this is where I'm coming from, this is the way I think we can get ourselves out of this economic situation, let's take a walk down memory lane. Let's think about, well, what is that person's track record in voting for economic plans?

And I do want to remind Mr. MURPHY and Madam Speaker that we have a country now, eight straight budget deficits, these deficits are now forecast as far as the eye can see, we all know that. And we're going to talk about the economic recovery plan tonight and we're going to talk about the details of what was in that plan and what was not in that plan, equally important. Because I heard a lot of discussion about things that weren't even related to what was in the economic recovery plan. We'll have that discussion in a moment.

But what's important to think about when you consider what individuals have credibility and what groups have credibility when talking about the budget deficit and which do not, it has to do with the fact that these eight straight budget deficits that we've had followed four consecutive budget surpluses that President Bush inherited.

And one of the things about the economic situation that we find ourselves in is when we get out of this—and we will, as a Nation, get ourselves out of this, as the President said last night—when we get out of this, we're going to be able to step back and look at the fiscal policies that worked and didn't, and look at the people who were in power that made those decisions that led to success and lack of success on the economy. Because it's a pretty clear discussion that you have when you say, here's the economy that President Clinton had, a very slow economy, to put it kindly. He had an enormous budget deficit—the largest budget deficit ever recorded was under President Bush's father up to that time—President Clinton inherited that situation. When President Clinton left office, the four straight budget surpluses that I was just discussing—and those surpluses were forecast as far as the eye can see, the 10-year budget projection, as we've talked about many times, Mr. MURPHY, was $5.6 trillion over 10 years. That was in surplus. If we had just kept in place the fiscal policies that we had at that time when President Bush put his hand on the Oath of Office—Bush 43—if we had just kept in place those fiscal policies, we could have nearly paid down the entire national debt as it existed to that time now 8 years later. But of course we didn't keep those fiscal policies in place, we went in a completely different direction, which is the way it works; when one party controls the White House, they implement certain policies, when one party controls Congress, they implement certain policies. When the same party controls both the White House and Congress at the same time—as happened during the first 6 years of President Bush's term—they chose to take the economy in a completely different direction, and boy did they ever. The economy went in a completely different direction than those four straight budget surpluses and one of the fastest periods of expansion and growth in economic history in America.

So now we find ourselves with a new administration. And yes, that administration has a Congress that is of the same party affiliation, and we will see how that plays out. But where I'm going with this, Mr. MURPHY, is, policy discussions in the future, you will be able to see very clearly what happened during the Clinton administration with the economy, what happened during the Bush administration; where did they begin, what did they leave their successor? And of course history has yet to be written about where President Obama leaves the economy. But I think it's safe to say it couldn't possibly be worse than what he inherited.

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. Would the gentleman yield? And you have to look at all of the different ways that we got here and all of the different ways we can start to repair this. And I just think of one right now. You talk about what would have happened if we just continued the policies of the Clinton administration. Obviously one of the things that changed the financial dynamic in this country is the fact that we decided to go wage a $700 billion war. And if that wasn't bad enough, we did it all off budget.

And that's one of the great untold stories of the Bush administration. No matter what you think about the war in Iraq—whether you think that we should have never gone, that we should have left earlier, that we should leave now, that we should stay for another 5 years—the fact was that maybe the first year of funding could have been deemed emergency off-budget funding, and maybe even the second year, but in the third and the fourth and the fifth and the sixth year, this wasn't a surprise to anybody. But one of the ways that we masked the amount of money that we were using for that war was we put it all off budget, and so it didn't make the annual deficit look as bad as it really was.

With one stroke of a pen, President Obama changed that. He said, you know what, no matter how bad it's going to make the numbers look on a yearly basis, we've got to start having some honest books here. We have got to start having some real accounting. So President Obama said, listen, from here on out, and he said this last night in his speech and he said it when he made this change in budgeting rules on Friday, we're going to put the cost of the war in both Iraq and Afghanistan online. It's going to be part of the budget; so we're going to have to pay for it. We're going to have to pay for it.

Now, frankly, Mr. ALTMIRE and Mr. BOCCIERI, when it comes to protecting the American people, I think people are willing to step up to the plate and make some sacrifices to do that. Now, we may disagree about what that entails, but in the days after September 11, this country was ready to step up and sacrifice. This country was ready to step up and pay for whatever it took to protect this country. And I really congratulate President Obama for stepping forward and saying, listen, yes, I want to get out of Iraq; yes, I think I need to step up our commitment in Afghanistan; but for however long that takes and however much it costs, we're going to do it in the confines of a budget. We're going to have an honest budget, an honest document. The American people are going to see the numbers however raw or bad or ugly they may be, but we're going to be honest about it.

And I think that's what people out there are asking for, Mr. ALTMIRE. I mean we're back in our districts every weekend, and as bad off as people are right now, as difficult as the times are, I think they're willing to sort of see a path forward. They know it's going to be hard, but they want to know how hard it is, how big the challenge is, and then they are, I think, ready to step up. But we've been masking the problem up until now. And I think President Obama has got some room right now in order to basically put it all on the table, be honest with the people about what the problem is, and then ask us to step up to the plate and solve it.

And he's facing right now Republican opposition, if I may make one more point, whose answer to every solution is let's do nothing. Everybody on the Democratic side has agreed or disagreed with different parts of the economic recovery strategy, but at least we're over here trying to think of a way out of this. The response from the other side has been essentially to just sit back and let the economy tumble into chaos. The American people want action. They want to know how big the problem is, and they want to step up to the plate and help solve it, Mr. ALTMIRE.

Mr. ALTMIRE. I thank the gentleman.

And as I indicated earlier, one of the things that I think the American people find so troubling about the direction the debate is taking, let alone the policy implications, is exactly what the gentleman from Connecticut talked about, that there appears to be a strategy of betting on success for the Democratic side and the Republican side appears to be betting on failure. I will leave it to others to speculate on what their desire is for the outcome. We will trust their motivations, but they certainly think that we're in failure mode.

Now, I find that to be very troubling because I want to have a Congress that works together where all sides are heard. And President Obama made every effort to reach out to the Republicans and solicit their opinions. And I do think, Madam Speaker, that when you hear things like we heard earlier, a discussion on how this economic recovery plan that we passed was going to lead to government-run health care, well, there is no provision in that recovery plan that alludes to, relates to, correlates to, leads to government-run health care. It is not in the bill that we passed, which is now law. There is no provision for the field mouse in San Francisco that we heard so much about. There are no earmarks in the bill. We heard when the President referenced earmarks, there was derision from the other side last night during the President's remarks, which I think the American people find disingenuous because there are no earmarks in the bill. There are zero earmarks.

So when I'm thinking about how I'm going to vote and I'm thinking through what's in the bill and what my constituents want me to do and I have people weigh in with an opinion, one of the things I'm going to consider is what's their motivation in offering that opinion, but is it an informed opinion? And if an individual comes up to me and complains to me about field mice in San Francisco or earmarks in the bill or how the bill is going to lead to universal health care, it's pretty clear that person has either not been truthful about what's in the bill or not made an effort to learn what's in the bill. Neither of those leads to good policy decisions. And I think that's what the gentleman from Connecticut and I are getting to.

So I am going to have the very, very high honor at this time of doing something that we don't do very often here in the 30-Somethings. We have five core members, Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ from Florida, Mr. RYAN from Ohio, Mr. MEEK from Florida, who are the leaders and the originators of the group from back before Mr. MURPHY and I were able to win election to this House. Mr. MURPHY and I have participated and are going into our second term now. So we are very honored tonight, and as everyone knows, Madam Speaker, who watches this over the airwaves, we have just a tremendous fan base for the 30-Somethings. There are countless individuals.

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. At last count, Mr. ALTMIRE, it was up to seven.

Mr. ALTMIRE. A handful of people that do actually pay attention to the 30-Something Group. So for them this is a very exciting moment because we are tonight going to initiate a new Member into the 30-Somethings with his maiden 30-Something speech, a great Member also from Ohio; so he is very close geographically to both Mr. RYAN and my district, which is in Pennsylvania. And at this time for all of those 30-Something junkies that are out there and pay attention to what we have to say, the very small group that that is, I would turn it over to Mr. BOCCIERI from Ohio.

Mr. BOCCIERI. Thank you, Mr. ALTMIRE, and thank you, Mr. MURPHY, for allowing me to participate in this great experience of serving in the House of Representatives here. It's truly an honor and truly a privilege for a grandson of a carpenter and a coal miner and a steelworker, who my parents were the first in their families to go to college and I have two successful brothers. One's a chemist and a pharmacist and the other is in the military. So to serve here is truly an honor.

And, Madam Speaker, I will tell you that people are listening and they do care and they do want to learn about what we're doing here in the House of Representatives. And I said this when we were debating the American Recovery Act and the bill that was going to help put America first. We talked about how this great Nation is in a great recession and that we are finding ourselves in nearly almost double-digit unemployment in Ohio, a great State, a great manufacturing State that has suffered disproportionately to the rest of the country. We have seen jobs pack up and move overseas, families struggle. We have seen families lose entire pensions, lose their way in terms of finding health care for their family, being able to put bread on the table. And I will tell you the good people of Ohio want to work. They want a job. They want to punch a time clock. They want to carry a lunch pail because they believe that hard work and perseverance are what has built this country and made it strong and made it what it is today.

But yet we find the decisions that we have made here, and both Democrats and Republicans, in my humble opinion, share the culpability of this, but the decisions that we have made here need to empower our country, empower our workforce so that we can build roads and bridges and build the new technologies of tomorrow right here in our great State, like what is happening in Pennsylvania, like what is happening in Connecticut, in the northeast, in New Hampshire. All over this country, we have people who believe, like my grandparents did, that with a little bit of hard work and perseverance that America is the place where your hopes and dreams could be realized. And they played by the rules. They punched the time clock. They worked for 30 years at a steel mill. But yet when that company packs up and moves overseas and they give all the money back to the holders of their common stock and the like and those folks who have invested in the company, but yet the people by the sweat of their brow punched the time clock, helped build America for what it is today are left with nothing when that company packs up and moves overseas, like we have seen repeated over and over and over again in Ohio.

And it's time that our generation of Americans stands up and demands more and demands that we put America first, that we invest in our workforce, our greatest asset of people, that we invest in the things that are going to make our country and our economy stronger.

And I pledge to you, as a 30-Something here with this great, fine distinguished group of legislators, that we will work to find answers to things that plague America, that challenge America, but not answers that will divide us along a partisan divide because at the end of the day, these are not Democrat or Republican challenges, they're not conservative or liberal challenges; they're American challenges. And they deserve an answer from both sides of the aisle. But we can't have the same politics of yesterday if we are looking towards tomorrow. And that's what I hope this group speaks about. That is what I hope this group will continue to champion.

I have heard you on the floor before I was ever a congressman. I've seen both of you stand up for what is right and what is honorable for our country to move forward.

And as a matter of point for this Economic Recovery Act, I will tell you this: That I think America is obviously in a great recession, and we will be judged as Members elected to lead this Nation in two measures: by action or inaction. And I challenge my colleagues on the other side of the aisle who just want to talk about small parts of this bill that perhaps may draw a little bit of emotion but when you look at the entirety of the bill, it's about investing in our country, in our people, and what will make America and our economy stronger. And we will be judged by what we do, whether we act or whether we don't, whether we block or whether we lead.

But we didn't hear from those who are opposing this when we spent a trillion dollars in Iraq to rebuild roads and bridges over there to make sure that they have new wastewater treatment facilities, new hospitals. We didn't hear about the fact that we're spending unbelievable amounts of money to make sure that they have the access to capital over in this country. While they're running up surpluses with their oil revenue, we're running down deficits. And in 2004 former President George Bush's Secretary of Health and Human Services, Tommy Thompson, flew to Iraq with one of many billion dollar checks in hand to make sure that every man, woman, and child in Iraq had universal health care coverage. A trillion dollars, my fellow Americans, are over in Iraq making sure that Iraqis have universal health care coverage while we have families in Ohio that right now will not send their kids to the dentist because they can't afford it because they lost their job. There's a huge disconnect.

So we need to understand, are we going to block or are we going to lead? Are we going to invest in our people and in America or are we going to rebuild Iraq? This is a defining moment for our country because a trillion dollars invested in our country at the end of the day is going to make our country stronger.

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. Mr. BOCCIERI, you're seeing on the ground in Ohio what Mr. ALTMIRE is seeing in Pennsylvania, what I'm seeing. People look at Connecticut sometimes and they have an image of Connecticut as one big suburb of New York and they think that we're all set and the economic downturn isn't going to affect a place like that. Let me tell you there are cities in my district, small cities of 50, 60, 70,000 people, that started this recession at 12 or 13 percent unemployment. That's what's going on even in Connecticut where you look at the per capita income across the board, and we are one of the wealthier States in the Nation. We have pockets of unemployment and poverty that will rival any other place in this Nation. They are cities in my district that used to be the brass city and the silver city and the hardware city, places that made things. Well, they don't make things anymore, in part because of the neglect that the prior administration showed for our manufacturing base as they allowed these jobs to bleed out into our foreign competitors. We didn't reinvest. We didn't protect our manufacturing base, but we also didn't try to find what was next.

And what President Obama talked about last night was, as I said at the outset, a twofold strategy. Let's put a plug in the dike right now. Let's stop this bleeding of jobs. This stimulus package that we supported is going to create or save 3.5 million jobs in this country, thousands of jobs in each of our congressional districts. But it's also going to start us on a path forward to try to replace a lot of the lost manufacturing base, much of which may not be coming back. President Obama said, listen, energy, clean, green technologies can be the future of this country, and he challenged us as a Congress to step up to the plate and chart a new path forward.

Mr. BOCCIERI, you rightly said that the real focus of this group, the 30-Something Group, needs to be on trying to talk about how we can come together. We would have loved for some of our Republicans to join us on the stimulus package that, by the way, in a new poll that came out has shown to be supported by 65 percent of Americans. By a 2-1 margin they support this stimulus bill. They are just as concerned about the debt as they are about any subject out there, but they recognize the need to do something right now.

And we came down here in the first days of the last session, as we pursued our "100 Hours Agenda" of starting to roll back a lot of the damaging policies of the Republican Congress. And we showed that, on bill after bill, we had Republicans supporting us on every single one of those measures, whether it was the minimum wage, whether it was the College Affordability Act, whether it was the stem cell legislation, the recommendations of the 9/11 Commission being implemented. We had dozens and dozens of Republicans supporting us on all of those measures.

And we are going to get that type of bipartisan cooperation again, because what we are going to put out there, what President Obama is going to place before the Congress is going to be an agenda for America, whether you are represented by a Republican or a Democrat.

So I know there is a lot of focus on the cable news shows right now, Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, on the division in this place. But I do believe, Mr. BOCCIERI, that we are going to chart a course forward, both in the short term and the long term, that can bring both of these parties together.

But we've got to convince our Republicans that the solution is not, as you put the dichotomy, inaction; that they have got to commit themselves, and the American people wants them to, to action. Once they do that, we will be able to forge a path together.

Mr. ALTMIRE. The gentleman was correct in pointing out where the middle-class Americans in this country were before this recession even started. And the economic policies that were in place actually led to a decrease in real dollars of median household income over the 8 years President Bush was in office. And that was the case even before the recession started in December of 2007, a real decrease in median household income over the term in office.

Now, that's not something that people in western Pennsylvania want to hear. That's something that was a cause of alarm that was not dealt with in previous Congresses or by the administration.

And, unfortunately, what we had was, in the early part of the administration especially, the enormous spending that took place, without pay-as-you-go budget scoring—which we have talked about many times—without that offset that says, very simply, you have to have money on one side of the ledger if you want to decrease revenue or spend more money on the other. It's a very simple concept. We all do it in our own home checkbooks and every business in America has to do it, balance budgets. If you want to spend more, you have to pay for it somewhere else in the budget.

Well, that wasn't happening, and the outrageous spending that took place, running up literally trillions of dollars in debt, was running the country on a credit card. We have talked many times about the policies that were put into place as a result of that, all the spending that took place. They were running the country on a credit card. Well, guess what? Like any credit card that any American would use, eventually the bill comes due. And that's what this recession is about. The bill has come due.

Now, with any credit card, there is interest that's accumulated with that. And we have talked before and it's incredibly important to the discussion to think about when you think, where are we going to go with this stimulus plan, is this the right course of action. One of the largest line items in the entire Federal budget is interest on the national debt. It's going to be somewhere in the neighborhood of $300 billion this budget year for just interest on the national debt—$300 billion. That's a lot of money. That's money that's going to interest.

And that's because of the decisions that had been made in the past, but there is nothing we can do about that. There is nothing we can do about what was in place when President Obama took office and when the 111th Congress took office. But what we can do something about is where do we go from here. So we have talked enough about how we got here. Where do we go from here?

It was the vast majority of the American people and certainly the majority of both the House and the Senate believed that the best course of action was to immediately inject some funding into the economy, yes, in the temporary way that's going to increase our debt even more, which is what we heard from the previous special order. But the cost of doing nothing would have increased the debt even more.

Because when you have a downward spiral in the economy like we have, when you lose 500,000 jobs in November, 550,000 in December, 600,000 in January, and you see that that is going to be the continuing process if we do nothing, those are people that are no longer taxpayers, because they are out of work. Those are people that, in many cases, are now receiving social services, often Federal money; that, instead of paying into the system, are receiving from the system by the hundreds of thousands every month with no end in sight, if we do nothing.

The economy, the economic slowdown, the lack of credit, the foreclosures that take place, all of that, along with unemployment, increases our debt more in the long term and even the short term than we had to do with our stimulus. So that's what that was about. It was about putting money back in the hands of the American people through tax cuts that affect 95 percent of the American people, a tax cut for 95 percent.

It's about putting money in every sector of the economy, spreading it and casting that net as wide as we possibly could to connect to every community in the country and make sure that they can share in the economic recovery that we hope this plan leads to.

There is no guarantee of what that level of success is going to be. In fact, there is no guarantee of success at all. We are very hopeful, but there is one guarantee: If we had done nothing, the situation would get worse. That is the guarantee.

Mr. BOCCIERI.

Mr. BOCCIERI. I agree with the gentleman from Pittsburgh. I have heard from all of our orientations and briefings that we received from nearly 200 economists, the most conservative to the most liberal, have all said that the United States Government has to do something.

And there's only two things that we can do. We can work with the administration and the Federal Reserve to manage interest rates so people can get an auto loan, so they can go and take out a student loan or go to college, or they can take out a mortgage and buy that dream home that they have always wished for, or we can inject huge amounts of capital into the market to help stimulate the economy, to help recover our economy. This isn't going to be the be-all and end-all of economic woes.

In fact, I have told many Ohioans that this will act as a backstop against further job loss and create jobs along the way and invest in America. And that's what it should be about.

I mean, leadership is about action, not just a position. Leadership is about action. And when we take action to invest in our people, invest in our roads, rebuild our bridges, rebuild our schools, and invest in what is our greatest asset, the American people, we are going to make our country stronger.

And Senator WEBB said in his book recently—I will throw him a shout-out here, you know, Senator WEBB said the health of a nation, the health of a society should not be measured at its apex or at its top, but at its base, at its base. Because that's where the majority of the people work every day to make the living, live the American dream. And they are what America is about, the hope and promise of America that was often talked about on the campaign trail last year.

You know, I just look at my family's history. The hope and promise of America is in my family. And they have worked so hard to allow that to happen, but they couldn't have done that without a strong government that understands that measured approaches to help put our people back to work, measured approaches that will invest in key things and strategic things that are going to make our economy stronger and our people stronger are about what we should do.

And I can tell you that when we look at this American Recovery and Reinvestment Act, it's just exciting what we are talking about doing here. And the President said this yesterday in his speech to the Nation, when he said that we are going to have a visionary approach to how we approach the 21st-century economy.

Those green energy jobs, that in 3 years we are going to double our green energy production. We are going to invest in plug-in hybrids like we are researching right here in the 16th Congressional District in Ohio. We are going to invest in fuel-cell technology like we are doing right in the 16th District in Ohio. And we are going to invest in biomass research like we are doing in the 16th Congressional District.

Those are going to create jobs back home. Those are going to put people to work, move away from our dependence on foreign oil. And God only knows that we need to move away from our dependence on foreign oil. Forty percent of our Nation's demand comes from the Middle East, and we allow our country to be subject to what OPEC decides for us? No, we can inject this capital to create the jobs of tomorrow and move away from our dependence by research and technology.

This is what we have done. This is what we have done to make our country stronger. So I submit to you that leadership is about action and not just position. We have to do something to make our country stronger.

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. Mr. BOCCIERI, just to give you a little perspective on what the folks that are running local governments, the folks that are at the real foundation of our system that are struggling every day with this company going out of business or this company not being able to expand, let me tell you what they are saying, all right?

The mayor of Oak Ridge, Tennessee, Tom Beehan, says, "The stimulus package is going to be huge for Oak Ridge. There is money in the stimulus package for environmental cleanup, and it's heading this way."

The mayor of Columbus, Ohio, Michael Coleman, says, "The stimulus package will stop the freefall, and it is going to lead to growth in the future."

The Phoenix mayor, Phil Gordon, "This will actually create jobs with the private sector in all different areas."

Alabama State Representative Jimmy Martin says, "Until the stimulus passed, Alabama was looking at laying off 8,000 teachers next year, increasing class sizes to historic proportions and, in the process, wiping out the progress we've made in the past 5 years. The stimulus package will change that reality."

And the Wisconsin insurance commissioner, Sean Dilweg, says, "We know the cost of health care premiums for unemployed workers makes it difficult for them to purchase coverage. The COBRA subsidy in the stimulus bill will make it much easier for families to continue their health care coverage."

These are local leaders with boots on the ground talking about how this is going to affect their community. They are backed up, as I said, by the 65 percent of Americans, in today's survey, that support this bill as well.

And, Mr. BOCCIERI, talking again about that contrast between action and inaction, well, for those of us who listened not only to President Obama's address last night but listened to the Republican response, listened to our former colleague here, Bobby Jindal, give the response to that speech, well, you know, maybe we are not giving him enough credit, there were a couple of alternatives that they posed, but essentially the alternatives were to go back to the economic philosophy and the economic strategy that got us into this mess in the first place.

The alternative to our plan for action seems to alternate between inaction or a reversal back to the policies of the Bush administration; in effect, trying to use and leverage this economic crisis as a means to further decrease taxes for people in this country making enormous incomes who, frankly, right now in this moment of economic crisis, don't need that additional subsidy from the government.

I think, going forward, that we are going to have cooperation here. I think, as our friends on the other sides of the aisle do go back to their districts, they are going to hear a command from their constituents to come to the table and try to be a part of the solution. They are going to hear what I just enunciated for my colleagues from local officials who are crying out for this help in the private sector and, frankly, on the public side.

This package is going to predominantly, to a large extent, create jobs in the private sector. That's our focus right now. But it is also going to protect the jobs of some teachers and some firefighters and some cops out there that our communities badly need, Mr. ALTMIRE.

It's a prescription to get this economy back up and started towards recovery. Mr. BOCCIERI is right; you know, this isn't salvation, this is a life raft. This is something that is going to be able to bridge us to real recovery. And I hope that, in the end, we are going to get a little bit more bipartisan cooperation on it, Mr. ALTMIRE.

Mr. ALTMIRE. I thank the gentleman.

Tomorrow, on Thursday, we expect the President to drop off his budget here in the Congress so we can all have a look at the details of the plan that were discussed last night.

And what I find so exciting and so refreshing about the approach that we are going to see with this budget is we are going to consider the economic policies, moving forward, in their entirety. What are some of the major issues that affect every family, every individual, every small business, every business in this country? Well, energy, health care, and education. Those are three things that have been neglected for a very long time in Congresses both Republican and Democrat.

But that is over, because we have a President, as we heard last night, who understands that the only long-term solution to the economic problems that we have today is to solve our energy crisis, our dependence on foreign oil that Mr. BOCCIERI referred to.

We have to find a way to improve our health care delivery system, to increase access, so that we don't have 43 million Americans that lack any health insurance, we don't have small businesses that experience double-digit cost increases year after year. Less than half of small businesses in the country are able to offer health care to their employees at all.

And by including in the discussion on the economy health care, energy, and education, we are taking a comprehensive look at the future of America, at the issues that are going to allow America to remain the preeminent Nation in the world for knowledge and innovation and technology.

And that's something that, by looking at it together, we are going to be able to continue that success, dig our way out of the ditch that we are in right now with the economy, but not forget about the issues that have to be a part of that, moving forward, including a look at government spending, as we have talked about, and the other policy issues.

Mr. BOCCIERI. Thank you.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania is very appropriate in his remarks. And I will tell you that, you know, from a freshman's perspective, I think this bill that made it through the Congress was the eighth wonder of the world. And you out there listening may wonder why: Because there were no earmarks in the bill, and there were no earmarks to specific districts in the bill.

And I considered that the eighth wonder of the world, because Article I, section 1 of the Constitution said the Congress will make appropriations. We will appropriate the funds for the projects, for the public policy that we believe is most important to move our country forward.

We talked about financial stability a little bit, about how we need to make our economy stronger.

Well, it comes with prudent reforms that we need to make within Wall Street, within the stock market, because it doesn't make any sense at all from this economics major at St. Bonaventure University, the fact that we are allowing speculators to drive our economy.

The laws of supply and demand have seemingly been thrown out the window, and we are allowing people to bet on the price of fuel going up, people to bet on the price of commodities going up, like grain and cereals and those sorts of things, bet on people foreclosing, bet on people failing to pay their mortgage. To me, that sounds like a recipe for disaster, and we need some stability in our financial markets, and we need an administration like President Obama is going to enact to make sure that the Securities and Exchange Commission and those regulatory agencies for our financial markets are going to do the jobs that we empowered them to do and to bring to justice those people who are manipulating the economy.

I can tell you that many people are struggling back home. In fact, people are working so hard. In fact, a recent study that was done late last year found that people of average means, average working-class families, are working 18 percent harder, yet their wages have started to decline and stagnate and go down while their tax burden has gone up.

Now, the top 1 percent of the country has seen their wages increase and their tax burdens reduced because of the last administration's policy that will reward the wealthiest of our country. Those folks who have the means to pay and help determine public policy for our country to invest in the things that are going to make our country stronger, we are giving them the breaks when we should be giving the breaks to the middle-class families. Remember what Senator WEBB said. The health of a society is measured not at its top, at its apex, but at its base, because it is the base that invests the most into this country.

I tell you, I was so proud to hear President Obama say and to be strong as our Nation's leader and perhaps the leader of the free world suggest that we will make it through this crisis. We will make it through this crisis. America has seen tough times before, and he said that the weight of this crisis will not determine the destiny of our Nation. And he was so right, that we have the wherewithal to get through this.

To my friends on the other side who are going to prepare their charts and graphs and talk about exploding Federal deficits, we need to understand that President Obama inherited this. He inherited $1 trillion that was spent on Medicare part D, but yet families and seniors back home still can't get their prescription drugs and pharmacies are struggling.

We spent $1 trillion in Iraq to rebuild roads and bridges over there. President Bush thought we needed to make that investment, to make sure that every man, woman and child in Iraq had universal health care coverage. We gave $1 trillion in tax cuts to the wealthiest Americans.

Well, it is time that we focus on the middle class, not on the apex, but on the base of our Nation, and we do that by investing in the people that have made this country stronger and will make this country stronger.

One last point I want to make here before we wrap this up this evening. We talk about the budget deficit. This country since its beginnings has carried some sort of debt, from the Revolutionary War on up through the present time we find ourselves.

In 1946, in 1946, after this country made it through the Great Depression and made it through World War II, the government was spending more and borrowing more than the economy could produce; spending more and borrowing more than the economy could produce. Right now we are at 38 percent of what the economy can produce. After this investment in America and we are on the road to recovery, we will be about 50 percent. We still have to pay this off, that is acknowledged, but we are in a great recession, and we will have the political will and the economic wherewithal to pay down this debt and get it closer to the margins that President Reagan saw back in the eighties, right around 28 to 30 percent. So we need to make those decisions. President Obama talked about that resolve. We will make it through this time.

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. Mr. BOCCIERI, I think about a company in my district that makes parts for cosmetics containers. It is a company that has been profitable for years. It has had a solid line of business. In fact, during this difficult economic time, it has seen its orders drop off by a few points here or there, but has been stable, has had its revenues remain constant. Yet because the banking system is frozen up, because they can't get access to lines of credit and to inventory capital, they have shuttered that company. They have shut it down. They have temporarily furloughed all of their workers until they can hopefully figure out a means to start operations again.

To them, inaction is not an option. They have done everything right. They have kept their business running. They have struggled to contain health care costs, to get the costs of production down, to continue to reach out and grow their business, and yet they are laying off dozens of employees in my district because they can't get access to capital.

The people they are laying off have done everything that we have asked of them as well. They have shown up to work, made a great product, invested in their company, invested back in their communities. And now they are left without a job. Now they are left without health care. Now they are asking how they are going to be able to continue to pay for their child's education, where they are going to find the next job.

Well, similar companies all around my district and their town are doing the same thing, and they know that inaction isn't an option either. They are part of that 65 percent of Americans who want this Congress to move forward on a strategy of stimulus. We have to do something, because inaction, because "nothing" simply isn't going to be the answer for this economy.

For that one company, that story that can be told dozens of times over in my district, hundreds of times throughout Connecticut and thousands of times throughout this Nation, that strategy about taking on the lack of access to capital for businesses, that strategy of growing jobs as an alternative to the people who have been laid off, that is going to be the answer.

I am proud to be part of this Congress. I am proud to be ready to answer President Obama's charge that he left us the other night. And I am proud to be part of the 30-Something Group that over the course of the next weeks and months is going to challenge the country and challenge this Congress to come together and provide solutions for those very people.

Mr. ALTMIRE. I thank the gentleman. I will take the opportunity to wrap up.

We have, over the last two election cycles, heard the message from the American people. I think the first time around it was a referendum on the policies of the past, that they wanted to move in a new direction and they weren't happy with the way things had gone. But the second election, the one that we just came through several months ago, was about turning the country around and moving in a new direction, and that is what we have done. We can have disagreements. I am sure the gentleman from Texas is going to express some of that disagreement following us, which is great. That is what democracy is all about.

But I do want the American people to consider, Madam Speaker, that they have got what they voted for over the past two election cycles. They got a change in direction. They got new policies in this Congress, new policies at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue. And we are all hoping for success. I am sure my friend from Texas is hoping for success as well. We need to turn the country around.

But I do want the American people to know that this Congress and the new administration are dedicated to moving this country forward, to implementing the changes that the American people voted for and asked us to engage on in their behalf.

So I would thank the gentleman from Connecticut and thank the gentleman from Ohio and welcome him to the 30-somethings. And I would say that any American who wants to learn more about Mr. BOCCIERI and the 30-Something Group can go to the House Web site, which is speaker.gov/30something with the number 30, and learn all about our new member from Ohio and any other member of the 30-somethings they want.

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. We are hopeful that, eventually that Mr. RYAN and Mr. MEEK and Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ, the veterans, will join us down here so that not only can the American people learn something about them on the Web site, but they can see them down here returned to their roots on the House floor as part of the 30-Something Working Group.

I thank the Speaker for giving us this time.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO THE LIFE OF GRAY PARSONS OF WILKES COUNTY, NORTH CAROLINA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina (Ms. FOXX) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. FOXX. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor a fallen hometown hero from Wilkes County in North Carolina. Gray Parsons, a Millers Creek firefighter, fell in the line of duty earlier this month while responding to a fire near Wilkesboro, North Carolina.

Parsons was a dedicated member of the North Carolina Forest Service's Fire Attack Support Team, where he had served for the past 10 years. His funeral was a tribute to his many years of service to the local community as local fire departments from across Wilkes County came out in force to honor Gray Parsons' life.

Many of Parsons' friends and family have said that giving his life in the line of duty was just how he would have wanted to go. He was a committed firefighter, a skilled chain saw operator, and an amazing wizard when it came to repairing anything mechanical.

He was generous with his always-ready smile and his hands were continually working to help others. His co-workers knew Gray Parsons as a man who was dedicated to his work. In fact, the day he responded to his final fire in Wilkes County was his day off, but he had spent the day helping his partner at the Forest Service finish a project. That was just the kind of person he was, generous, hard-working and committed.

The Wilkes community hailed Parsons as a model local hero at his funeral. His life inspired everyone who knew him for his kindness and indefatigable pride in his work and those he served.

He was a true American hero, an everyday man, who took pride in the uniform he wore and who loved to serve his community and protect those in danger.

He will be profoundly missed and will leave a gaping hole in the Wilkes County community, Forest Service and local first responders. My thoughts and prayers are with the friends and family of this great man who gave his life in the service of others.

TREATING ALL CITIZENS EQUALLY

uary 6, 2009, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. CARTER) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. CARTER. Madam Speaker, I thank you for recognizing me this evening.

I was real pleased to see our 30-Something Group over there has expanded their folks, a lot of new faces, and new faces are good for Congress. It is good to see them, and even though my in my opinion they are a little misdirected, they certainly are entitled to their opinion. I am not here to debate them tonight. Maybe some other night I might be here for that purpose.

Tonight I am here because I have been raising and talking about an issue here in the last couple of weeks, probably now going on a month, about a change in the tax law that I proposed in the form of a bill that I introduced here to instigate the "Rangel Rule," which would allow ordinary citizens to be treated as nicely as CHARLIE RANGEL, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, who by his own admission on the floor of this House failed to pay taxes for a period of quite a long time, something like 10 years or better. But he did catch up on those taxes when he finally realized kind of, whoops, I messed up for about 10 years, and maybe I ought to pay these taxes. It may have been a longer period of time than that. I don't know. It is not really relevant to the issue. The issue is that he was not assessed any penalties or interest by the IRS.

I really have a hard time figuring that out, because I have talked to a lot of people back home in Texas who have like not filed their taxes on April 15th, but have gotten an extension, and they ended up filing like on August 15th or October 15th, which is not a real long delay, nothing to compare with like 10 years or 20 years or whatever the period was. But they all got assessed penalties and interest by the IRS, and we really don't like to think that just because somebody happens to be the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee that they should be treated any differently than, say, those folks back there that I talked to in Texas or the folks that have contacted me from all over the country on this issue.

So I have been raising that issue, and in all fairness tonight I want to be fair to Chairman RANGEL, because he is a man that, of course, this House highly respects. There are other issues that have to do with Mr. RANGEL. We may go into some of those tonight. But in all fairness to the chairman, maybe I should have expanded this rule a little bit, because there are others who have issues that need to be dealt with, at least talked about.

You know, the current Secretary of the Treasury, Tim Geithner, I guess he had some issues that he had with taxes too. His were very confusing to me, because the other day, I couldn't find the board tonight, but we had a picture of a letter that a company sent, a fairly sizable check around $30,000-plus that was sent to Mr. Geithner, telling him here was his money he was supposed to pay his taxes with, and he was signing, by the obligation of this form, he was obligating himself to pay his Social Security and Medicare taxes.

And that he, by the signing of this document said, "I sure will. I promise you. I give you my word, that I will pay these taxes." And then, whoops, he just kind of let it slip his mind for about 4 years. And, in fact, it had completely slipped his mind until he became the subject of discussion in the United States Senate about whether or not he had a clear conscience to serve as the Treasury Secretary of the United States. At that point in time, he realized that, "Uh-oh, I believe I forgot something. I believe I forgot to pay my taxes for 2001 and 2002 and 2003 and 2004 and maybe some more." And so he rushed in and he paid those taxes.

Now, he didn't pay them all because he was slick enough or smart enough or maybe good lawyer, if he's lawyer, enough to know that the statute of limitations had run on 2 years of these taxes he was supposed to pay. And so I think he relied upon that statute to prevent him from having to pay that amount of money. But he, like Chairman RANGEL, he did some hustling and some catching up, and he caught up and he paid his taxes.

Now, you know, it's real upsetting to the IRS when people don't pay their income taxes. They get real upset about it. But my experience of being a lawyer and a judge for, well, going on 30-something years is that they get particularly irritated when you don't pay the Social Security and Medicare taxes you're required to pay, because they kind of feel like that's a whole lot bigger crime than slipping up and miscalculating on your income tax.

And they get downright serious about that. I've seen them padlock people's businesses over failing to pay those taxes. I have a good friend that used to run a place called Big G's in Round Rock, and he got padlocked all the time back in the '70s when I represented him. And he always got slapped with heavy penalties and heavy interest.

But Mr. Geithner, Secretary Geithner, he finally paid some of those taxes, and he paid some taxes, some interest. But once again, just like Chairman RANGEL, he wasn't assessed any penalties for intentionally not paying his taxes. And I say "intentionally" only by the state of the evidence that has been presented and the fact that he signed a document addressed to the IRS in which he pledged to them that he knew that the check they had sent him was for taxes and he knew he was obligated to pay those things.

So, with that sworn statement, I think it's pretty fair to say he intentionally didn't pay his taxes. Now, you know, he may have had just a temporary lapse of memory, but let's hope not, because we really don't want to think that the man that's in charge of the monetary system of the United States has that kind of temporary lapses of memory. I mean, we, as American citizens, certainly don't look for that quality in a Treasurer. And so I think we ought to be concerned about that.

So I guess what I'm starting off to say here is that I don't want Mr. RANGEL to think that I'm just mistreating him by himself, because I really don't intend to do that. I really think it's time for us to look at all these issues that are ethical issues that seem to have come up in the majority since the Democrats have been in charge of this Congress.

And, you know, it's kind of funny. I think it's really amazing. There are polls that show that the American people really think that the Democrats have only been in charge of this Congress since President Obama got in office. But, I mean, that's a mistake. This is actually the third year that the Democrats have been in charge of this Congress. So those things that everybody talked about last year that they thought the Congress did very poorly, and many seem to point the fingers at the Republicans, at that time the Republicans were not in charge of this Congress. This was the Democrats' Congress. They are in charge of it. They decide what comes to the floor and what doesn't come to the floor. They set the policies of this Congress at this time, and they have for the last almost 3 years.

So back when the Republicans were in charge, they talked about a culture of corruption. I'm not talking about a culture of corruption yet, but I am talking about certainly some lapses in ethical behavior on behalf of our colleagues.

And as our President, who, by the way, made a very nice speech last night, and many of us were very taken back by his speech—and we all recognize his very good talent at speaking to the American public. President Obama is a very skilled speaker. And I sat right there in that chair right there, and I listened to the whole thing, and I was impressed.

But he's had a little problem with some of his people that he's gotten to go to work for him. Besides the ones that we just talked about—and Secretary Geithner got away with what he had to do. I guess if we're going to have the "Rangel Rule," we might have the "Geithner Getaway," because he certainly got away with not paying his taxes for a period of time.

But, you know, Secretary of State, who was a candidate for the President of the United States, Hillary Clinton, she also had some issues that people got concerned about and probably should be. Her husband's foundation, President Clinton's foundation, received over $500,000 in donations from foreign governments and foreign nationals, and we've asked President Clinton's wife, Secretary Hillary Clinton, to be our representative to those foreign nations. There are strict guidelines about accepting donations like this, but it seems that those restrictions didn't seem to apply to her.

Of course, she's been confirmed and she does represent us with all foreign countries and all the foreign representation in the world. She is our agent. She speaks for us. The question we have is, is it ethical to take donations from foreigners and then serve this Nation as our representative with foreign nations? Is that the right kind of behavior? Is that the ethics that this House ought to be standing up for and the Senate ought to be standing up for? Could there be a conflict of interest here that we really should have discussed? Because she's negotiating with nations, many of whom have contributed to a foundation which furthers issues that are important to Bill and Hillary Clinton.

So, you know, she's there, and I'm sure that she's going to do a good job. I certainly hope so. But I think we at least ought to ask these ethical questions about Secretary Clinton.

Governor Richardson from New Mexico was another one that the President of the United States thought would be an outstanding Cabinet member. He was man enough to actually pull his name down because there were being issues raised in New Mexico about payments of pay-for-play schemes with companies that were involved with the State of New Mexico. And rather than bring this ethical lapse to the forefront, he thought it was better if he just stayed in New Mexico and dealt with his issues there, rather than having to bring them up here to Washington. That's good. It's a good thing. It looks like, after two or three tries, we're finally going to hopefully get a Commerce Secretary here.

So the whole point of being here tonight is to point out that you're not hearing a lot about it but there are an awful lot of ethical lapses of judgment that are going on in the Congress these days. And they seem to be all coming from the ruling majority.

I see that I have a friend here that has joined me. He's always a good friend, and he always comes to my aid when I'm standing alone, and that's my good friend and classmate, Dr. BURGESS from Texas.

Dr. BURGESS, I'd like you to join me and give us your ideas on some of the subjects we're talking about and any other subjects you want to talk about. I'll yield you such time as you may choose to consume.

Mr. BURGESS. I thank the gentleman for yielding. And as always, it's a pleasure to join him on the floor of the House. He has such good ideas.

And, certainly, the concepts talked about tonight are something that have perplexed me, perhaps not the individuals involved, but the concepts involved have perplexed me for years, because our Tax Code is complicated. It turns out it's so complicated the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the committee that's charged with writing our tax laws in this country, they've written laws that are so complicated they can't understand them and they cannot follow their own law.

Now, the judge very kindly has introduced legislation that if we're going to grant dispensation to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, perhaps we ought to grant that same dispensation to others who are at a less high station in life and perhaps find themselves just as unfortunate when trying to deal with our very complicated Tax Code.

The fact is, Madam Speaker, the Tax Code does not need to be so complicated. There are great ideas out there for simplifying the Tax Code. The good news is that 80 percent of the people in this country think that Congress ought to do something. They don't identify whether they think the Republicans ought to do something or the Democrats ought to do something, but Congress ought to do something about the complicated Tax Code that people have to follow.

We've got the chairman of the Ways and Means charged with writing the tax law, cannot follow the tax law because it is too complicated. We've got perhaps the smartest financial mind in the world, the man that was chosen as the President's Secretary of the Treasury, who has been charged with dealing with this very harsh financial environment in which we find ourselves, who, in spite of that high station in life and in spite of that keen, incisive intellect that is going to allow him to chart that course through these very turbulent economic waters, can't fill out his income tax, even when aided by TurboTax.

But I'm all about solutions, and I'm here to offer the solution that is going to uncomplicate the lives of these two very powerful and important public figures, public figures that we know we need to get us through these turbulent economic times.

Madam Speaker, I spent my life in health care. And we were deprived of one of the bright lights in health care, a former Senator, Tom Daschle, who had to withdraw his name from consideration because of difficulties with reporting taxes. And, quite honestly, it is difficult to know you have a car and driver that someone gives you, is that something you have to report as income?

We could simplify this process and eliminate these problems that would allow us many more great public servants to be able to come to the fore and help us with these vexing problems, economic turbulence and the difficulty with our health care system.

Now, I was a doctor back in Texas for over 25 years. You know, the old saying goes, "There's nothing as certain as death and taxes." But I will tell you that sometimes the taxes seem a lot more complicated than death. The Tax Code was created in this very body some 96 years ago, back in 1913. And it has grown from—you know, we talk about the length of bills today. In fact, we had one on the floor that stretched up halfway to the ceiling. But the initial Tax Code was 400 pages. Now the Tax Code stands at well over 67,000 pages, and the complexities are well-known. But they don't need to be there.

Part of the problem is, over the 96 years since the Tax Code was introduced, men and women on both sides of the aisle who were well-meaning have attempted just a little bit of social engineering into the Tax Code, and the result is this very complicated, complicated 67,000-page structure that we have in front of us today.

And it's creating problems for those of us who want to be in compliance with the law. We're desperate to be in compliance with the law. And every single American simply trying to comply with the law and fill out their taxes by April 15th is supposed to be familiar with all of those 67,000 pages of the tax rules.

Again, you consider a man as brilliant as the Secretary of the Treasury, Timothy Geithner. He couldn't understand and had difficulty filing his taxes. Well, you've got to wonder does your own tax attorney understand everything that's in those 67,000 pages, because when it comes to the Tax Code, ignorance of the law is no excuse. So we must fix the Tax Code.

Americans don't always see eye to eye on every issue. In fact, you saw evidence of that here last night, but again, 80 percent of the American people, according to American Solutions, think that the system of the way we go about filing and collecting our taxes needs major change. Everyone knows the problems. Every year, Americans waste billions of hours and billions of dollars complying with the complex Tax Code. In 2005, the average taxpayer paid almost $2,000 in household compliance costs. That means, you know, you've got to work several days a week just to pay the cost of paying someone to fill out your taxes because you don't want to make a mistake because things could go very badly for you. You might lose an opportunity to serve your government at the very highest level if you don't do this correctly.

I brought a little poster to share with the Congress. Again, I'm doing this in the spirit of generosity in offering a possible solution. I realize there are other solutions out there, and by no means do I intend to disparage other solutions that people are willing to talk about, but this is just one idea that's out there.

It was developed by my predecessor, Congressman Armeley, when he was in the House of Representatives here for many, many years. He wrote a book called the Flat Tax, and I remember buying the book in 1995. I believed in the book. I thought, certainly, by 1996 or 1997 that Majority Leader Armeley would have had that enacted into law. We sit here now over a decade later. It's time. It's time for just this type of change. Let's go through it. It's so simple, Madam Speaker.

It's just a little bit of personal information: Name and Social Security number; a spouse, if you have one, and the Social Security number; you write down your income, your personal exemptions; you add a couple of lines; you calculate the tax; you multiply it by the taxable income calculation—17 percent in this legislation that I introduced last week that, interestingly enough, is called H.R. 1040. It makes it easy to remember.

So, if you're following along at home and are wondering what is this panacea for our tax problems, H.R. 1040: calculate your taxes; calculate the refund; send it in. What did it take? All of 30 minutes—30 seconds. I beg your pardon. We have trouble with zeros here in this Congress. It takes all of 30 seconds, and you're done.

You don't have to keep that shoe box full of receipts. You don't need to go online and download a program that you don't understand. You don't need to have the concern that you filed a tax return that is in error and that you're going to be held accountable for that. No more expensive tax attorney bills. The hours of stressful research into preparing your taxes, think of what Americans could do with those hours if they were no longer bound to their desks in their houses, really, literally between now and April 15. There's no telling how many nice spring weekends are going to be spent sifting through that shoe box full of receipts. No more of Congress' picking one special interest group over another to reward in the Tax Code, and no more potential leaders of the free world who'll be having to pull their names out of contention because they can't comply with a very complicated Tax Code.

So, again, I come here tonight in the spirit of goodwill, in the spirit of offering solutions. We should be about solutions.

One of the things on the bill that I introduced, H.R. 1040, is a flat tax, but I'll have to say that Congress doesn't always know best, and I trust the American people to know best in their situations. If a family has constructed its finances around the IRS code, it would be wrong for Congress to simply come in and change all the rules of the game all at once. So this tax would be optional. People would have a period of time when they could opt into a flat tax. If they'd constructed their family's finances around the complicated Tax Code and they wanted to continue to file under the Tax Code, they could do so, but boy, if they're ready to kick that shoe box of receipts over into next week and take that weekend off that they were going to spend doing their taxes, that would be their choice. We should give Americans the power to choose, the power to make that choice as to whether or not they would like to opt into a fair or flatter tax.

A flat tax would be much less costly. Taxpayers could save $100 billion a year just on the cost of compliance. The result in increased personal savings would be a stimulus package that could have an immediate effect on the American economy.

Well, Madam Speaker, we live in a very political time, and this concept that I'm offering tonight is done in the spirit of offering solutions, in the spirit of cooperation to Members on both sides. I encourage people to look at H.R. 1040. Give me your ideas. Certainly, the bill has been introduced. Cosponsors are on the bill even as we speak, so there is an opportunity for other Members of Congress to cosponsor this legislation.

Again, you think of the difficulties the judge has already pointed out. He has had to introduce a bill called the Rangel Rule so the poor, little guy in his district who gets caught in the tax trap can at least have the same consideration in the tax courts that we gave to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

We've got the Geithner getaway. We've had the Daschle dodge. All of these issues could have been avoided if we would have simplified the Tax Code. It is within our power to do it. The American people are looking to us for solutions. They're not looking for partisan rhetoric. They're not looking for one side to gain an advantage over the other. They want us to work together on big issues like this. Eighty percent of the American people feel that the simplification of the Tax Code is something that is well-nigh due for the American landscape—filling out your taxes on a postcard, making it simple, giving that time back to your families. Yes, people need money nowadays, and the economy is rough, but boy, if you can give people back time, that is extremely, extremely significant. So we're going to give back money and time with a simplified tax form.

Madam Speaker, I am so grateful to my friend from Texas for yielding me time to talk on this very timely and important subject. We're just a few weeks away from the tax filing deadline, and many of us are going to lie awake at night and are going to wonder: By golly, am I going to have to file for the Rangel Rule because I made a mistake on my taxes, and now someone may be coming after me?

Fortunately, they've got Judge CARTER looking after them, and the gentleman from Texas has introduced his very forthright legislation, so we're trying to protect you on both sides. Maybe this is a preventative medicine flax tax where you won't even have the problem, but the judge has the remedy if you've gotten into difficulty with the Rangel Rule and with the Geithner get-away.

I appreciate the judge's holding this hour tonight.

Mr. CARTER. Reclaiming my time for questions to my colleague.

First off, I'm very aware that my colleague has been a strong proponent of the flat tax as we've been here in Congress, and I appreciate his coming up again and giving us his special message about what he sees as a solution to this problem. If I could ask you a question, Dr. BURGESS:

On the issue of Senator Daschle, who took about $180,000 worth of car rides or something, would this form solve that problem? Would that still be income to Mr. Daschle under the flat tax?

Mr. BURGESS. You know, Judge, you've asked a very good question. My understanding is it would not. We would simplify his life by his not having to keep up and keep tally. Everything that was offered as part of his compensation package would be considered under the 17 percent flat tax.

Mr. CARTER. That's the answer. I was wondering about that because it sure would have helped Senator Daschle in his quest to serve at the cabinet level of this administration if he hadn't had to claim those things, but of course, I guess we know under the present Tax Code—and most everybody knows—that if somebody spends money on your behalf, you gain benefit from spending money on your behalf.

I mean most all of us around here have to catch a cab every now and then. Shoot, it doesn't take any time at all before you run up a $15 or $20 cab fare. So I guess, in having a car drive you all over town for several years, you ought to kind of in the back of your mind figure that somebody's paying for this, and it's certainly not you, and they're doing it on your behalf, and you're getting the use of it, so maybe you ought to at least think about the fact that it ought to be income to you in some form or fashion.

It certainly was a benefit. I think that maybe Senator Daschle ought to be jumping up and down to be promoting the flat tax over with our colleagues on the other side of the aisle so he can, maybe, stay out of this kind of trouble the next time he comes along and somebody wants to make him one of the Secretaries of our administration.

I guess Mr. Richardson could have some benefit from the flat tax, and Mr. Geithner might even have some benefit from the flat tax. In fact, you've come up with a solution, and I want to thank you for coming up with solutions. Now, I have some friends who would argue that the fair tax also would be a solution, but we won't go into that today.

Mr. BURGESS. If the gentleman would yield, that is a fair observation. Again, by coming here tonight and talking about something that has been important to me for well over a decade, by no means do I mean to say that this is the only concept that's out there. There are other people who have good concepts. We ought to have the debate as a body and take good ideas from all within the body and come up with the answers to the tough questions. This is what the American people sent us here to do. If we can find a better way, if we can deliver time and money to the American people, then we should do so.

Mr. CARTER. Reclaiming my time, Dr. BURGESS, in a sense of fairness to our colleagues, I've come up with the Rangel Rule.

Do you think that I should seek to amend the legislation to expand the definition or the title of this rule where it's not just all on poor Chairman RANGEL's back? Maybe we could call it the Rangel/Geithner/Daschle/Who is Next Rule on paying taxes.

Mr. BURGESS. Well, if the gentleman would yield, he has posed a question that is technically very complex, and as just a simple country doctor, I'm probably not qualified to render an opinion on the title of his legislation.

Mr. CARTER. Truly, it's not a good night to go into the complexities because I think everybody knows it's pretty simple, that if you have to pay penalties and interest when you fail or if you just make a mistake on your income tax—and my colleagues who sit around this House would be in that same boat, I assume, because they're not the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee—then maybe the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee ought to pay those penalties and interest, too. If he doesn't, then maybe none of us should.

That's the whole idea behind the Rangel Rule. It's a simple rule. Just write at the bottom of your tax form "wish to exercise the Rangel Rule," and all penalties and interest would be excused. What a joy that would be for so many taxpayers in the United States. It would be a bipartisan effort because it wouldn't just be for Republicans or Democrats or even Independents. It would be for everybody.

Mr. BURGESS. If the gentleman would yield, I love the spirit of forgiveness that he has embodied within this legislation.

Again, my purpose in being here tonight was to offer a possible solution. I think Members of Congress should be about solutions. The American people want to see us be about solutions. This is one that is widely embraced and polls very well, but I would yield the floor back to the judge, and would certainly, again, thank him for his forthrightness and for his leadership in holding this special hour tonight.

Mr. CARTER. Well, I appreciate your coming back up here and telling us about the flat tax. I think the flat tax is a concept that all Americans, no matter what party they're a part of, should at least have the patience to take a look at. The flat tax is for the simplification of the public's life because, really and truly, we spend over-time around this place complicating Americans' lives. I believe they would be blessed to no end if we would just spend a little time de-complicating their lives.

This last week, in fact, I got off the phone tonight. A fellow asked me about that stimulus package. He said he watched JOHN BOEHNER drop that thing on the floor here and scare everybody in the room. He wanted to know was that really the stimulus package or was that just something he dropped to get people's attention. I said, "No, that was it," and that was very complicated.

I think, honestly, everybody would say that, in the 12 hours that that stimulus package was available to Republicans and to many Democrats, nobody, even the best speed reader wasn't able to read that almost 1,100 pages and decipher what it meant. Unfortunately, I happen to be a fellow who has had to deal with deciphering what the law means for a long time.

And some of the Federal laws are written in such a way that, you know what? It takes an act of Congress to figure them out, as we say back down in Texas, because they are very complicated, and we complicate people's lives. So the flat tax may be an idea whose time has come that we won't complicate people's lives.

The purpose of talking about all of these issues that concern the ethical behavior of this House is because it has been the subject of the 30-Something Group which preceded me here for at least 4 years that I know of. I have sat in the chair where the Speaker is sitting right now and heard the 30-Something Group accuse people in this House of corruption. I haven't accused anyone of corruption because I think, actually, that's beyond the pale of what Members of Congress should do.

I just said that there is ethical lapses that have to be discussed, and if they turn out to be more than that, that's for someone other than me to discuss. That's for someone like the Ethics Committee or the Justice Department to deal with, but not for me to deal with.

I'm certainly not accusing anyone of corruption here tonight. But I am very concerned that we put sunlight on the types of behaviors where Members of Congress have failed to do the responsibilities that we tell the American citizens is their responsibility as a citizen—that is, pay their taxes and pay them on time. And yet they don't suffer the penalties that the average taxpayer suffers for failing to do that. That's the purpose of me being here today.

I'm really pleased to see my friend from California (Mr. DREIER) here. I hope he will talk to you and share some of his wisdom on the issues of ethics.

I know you served in this House for many, many years, and you've dealt with these issues over and over. And I'd like to yield you what time you'd like to use here.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my very good friend and colleague.

I've heard two Texans up here talking about not only the issue of ethics but also tax reform. And I'd like to take a few minutes to talk about a proposal that I put forward that I believe will go a long way towards dealing with a lack of compliance, which is an issue that we are regularly addressing, and something that there has been very little talk about, and that is the issue of economic growth.

We've talked about saving our economy. We've talked about working towards recovery. But it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, one of the important things that we need to focus on is economic growth itself. And, frankly, if we had a tax code that is like the one that my friend, Mr. BURGESS, was just talking about a little earlier, I think that many of the problems that we have with people who have not complied with the Tax Code would, in fact, be diminished.

As my friend said, he's not accusing anyone of ethical violations as he's standing here, but we do know this: with a tax code that is as voluminous as it is, it encourages a lot of the behavior that we have. And I think what we need to do is simplify it.

On the opening day of this Congress, I was privileged to introduce, as I did in the last Congress, what I call the Fair and Simple Tax Plan, F-A-S-T, which is FAST. And I think there is so much common sense to this. And I know that, having two very distinguished gentlemen from Texas, common sense is in great abundance in Texas. And I will admit it is, on occasion, lacking in my State of California. But remember, we've got common sense in California, but we have, on occasional, not enough common sense. But it seems to be very abundant in Texas, and even in North Carolina. I see my colleague from North Carolina here, and I think it's abundant there.

But I do believe, Mr. Speaker, that as we look at a commonsense approach to deal with the issue of economic growth—which, again, should be a very important driving factor for us here because we're not simply talking about stemming the downturn, we're not talking about, you know, our attempt to recover. We need to have policies that create bold, robust economic growth, and we can do that.

So let me take a moment, if I might, Mr. Speaker, and talk about the Fair and Simple Tax Plan.

What it consists of is taking the six rates that we have today and it cuts that in half down to three rates. The first rate, which is the income on the first $40,000, would be a flat 10-percent rate. Then, for income between $40,000 and $150,000, the rate would be 15 percent. And the flat rate for income above $150,000 would be a 30-percent rate.

Now, I know a lot of people say, "Why don't we just do a clean, simple flat tax and have that be it?" Well, there are a number of things and challenges around here, a number of areas that are really sacrosanct.

People always talk about the need to deduct the interest on their home mortgage, right? When we talk about a flat tax, the red flag seems to go up and they say, "What about the deductibility of interest on home mortgages?" Well, under the Fair and Simple Tax Plan—which, again, was introduced on the opening day—we maintained the opportunity for people on a single-page form to deduct the interest on their home mortgages.

And what else is very important and sacrosanct to people, and that is to be able to make charitable contributions. So we maintained the deductibility of charitable contributions.

And one of the things that President Obama spoke here in this Chamber about last night was the issue of health care and the challenge that exists there. We all know that we need to take action. So the Fair and Simple Tax Plan includes a $15,000 exclusion so that people can purchase either direct health care or they can purchase insurance. And, again, it incentivizes them to do that.

Then it deals with issues that have been heavily debated here. One of the things that people are concerned about regularly are jobs leaving the United States and going overseas. Our constituents talk about that with regularity.

A lot of people make what I believe is a misplaced claim that somehow embarking on trade agreements, which simply open up new markets, that causes the flow of jobs out of the United States into other countries. Well, the fact is it's not trade agreements, Mr. Speaker, that do that. What it is is it's the fact that the United States of America has a tax, a tax on businesses, the job creators in this country, that is second only to Japan. And under the Fair and Simple Tax Plan, we slash that tax from 35 percent to 25 percent. Again, as you talk to those job creators out there, that would go a long way towards encouraging economic growth.

And then the capital gains rate. Well, people say, "What capital gains do we have today with this market downturn?" We need to look long-term. We need to look at what we want. And we want greater economic growth and to reduce that top rate on capital gains from 20 percent to 15 percent rather than increasing it, as I believe action that would go a long way towards encouraging economic growth and it would help us deal with the flow of revenues that we will need for much of the spending that is taking place.

And we all acknowledge, well, the stimulus package went way, way, way overboard with $800 billion and a thousand pages. We were passing that thing around as we were debating it the other day, those of us who could catch it and could throw it with 1,100 pages.

The fact is we all recognize that infrastructure spending is essential, very, very important for the goods' movement and other things here. But we could do that for significantly less than the $800 billion that is in this so-called stimulus bill.

So we need revenue to be generated, and I believe that slashing the top rate on capital gains, taking that rate on job creators, on businesses, from 35 to 25 percent, would go a long way towards creating economic growth, which, therefore, would create the flow of revenues that we need to meet a lot of these essential items that are out there.

Mr. Speaker, the other thing that it does is that it completely eliminates the inheritance tax, the death tax, throws it out the window. We all know that for people who have to go to a funeral home and then deal with the Internal Revenue Service within a matter of days is a challenge. I have had to go through this. It's very painful. That tax is very, very punitive. It's forced people to have to sell businesses and others just to meet that tax obligation that is there.

Right now that tax rate has been 45 percent, and it had been 55 percent. And I believe that if we could completely eliminate that, that would, again, create a tremendous opportunity for growth to take place. A lot of small businesses would be saved.

And all of this is done within the context of a single-page form, throwing the complex code that we have out, and the taxpayers would have the option of going to this Fair and Simple Tax Plan.

I think that that's the kind of creative proposal that we need to take on to deal with the challenge of economic growth, which I think should be priority number one as we seek to deal with the economic downturn that we have.

I also want to say that on the overall issue of ethics, I'm very proud—there are a lot of people who have said on this issue that when we Republicans were in charge, we did next to nothing on it. Well, as my friend knows very well, when Republicans were last in charge, we put into place very, very strong—a very strong ethics reform package.

We dealt with a lot of these issues, and it hasn't gotten the kind of attention that I believe we need to get. Why? Because people have constantly engaged in attacking Republicans. And, obviously, there has been corruption on both sides of the aisle. A very, very bipartisan thing, tragically, has been that corruption has existed on both sides of the aisle.

But I do want to make sure that the record is clear that we, when we were in the majority, spent an awful lot of time addressing that issue, and we put into place with some bipartisan support, I think, very good ethics reform.

But especially at this time—and my friend is absolutely right. We need to make sure that a good example is set for the American people because we are going through a tough time. The President made it so clear. His opening remarks last night were so on target, about the fact that people have sleepless nights, the fact that people are anguishing over this. This notion of a high school student opening that envelope and having to put that acceptance letter back into the envelope, as the President said so well here last night, is the kind of story we hear with great regularity.

And I, the other day here on the floor, shared an even greater tragedy. A very good friend of mine told me that his 14-year-old son's best friend's father had just committed suicide because of the serious economic downturn that we have faced. And I've talked to a number of people, and the suicide rate has continued to climb as it relates to the economic challenges that we have.

That's why I continue to believe that even though we've passed this so-called economic stimulus package—which, from my perspective, I hope and pray, we all hope and pray, that it brings us out of the downturn that we're going through right now. But, frankly, if one looks at history, it is proved to have failed.

Now, in special orders, a number of us have been regularly quoting Secretary Morgenthau. Henry Morgenthau was the Treasury Secretary under Franklin Delano Roosevelt. And in 1939, Secretary Morgenthau was testifying before the House Ways and Means Committee. And in his testimony before the House Ways and Means Committee, he said the following—now, remember, this is Franklin Delano Roosevelt's Treasury Secretary. I've read the card so many times, I've got it now committed to memory.

He said, "We have tried spending money." Again, this is testimony before the Ways and Means Committee. "We have tried spending money. We have spent more money than we have ever spent before. Now, after 8 years of this," the Roosevelt administration, "we have an unemployment rate that is just as high today as it was when we started, and we have an enormous debt to boot." That's what the Secretary of the Treasury of Franklin Delano Roosevelt said in testimony in 1939 before the House Ways and Means Committee.

I got to thinking about this the other day, and I believe that we should look to another Democratic President as our model for economic growth, that being John F. Kennedy. So, over the weekend, I started reading up about Douglas Dillon, who was the Treasury Secretary under John F. Kennedy. He put into place bold, robust, dynamic economic growth policies through tax cuts that took the top rate from 90 to 70 percent and had a capital gains reduction. And it unleashed tremendous growth, a surge in the flow of revenues in the Federal Treasury.

Similarly, I was very honored to be elected to this Congress, as my friend said correctly, a long, long time ago. 1980 is when I was privileged to be elected, the same day that Ronald Reagan was elected to be President. And Ronald Reagan inherited a tremendous—a very, very difficult economic time. The unemployment rate was very, very high. Interest rates were approaching 20 percent. We had inflation very high. It was a very, very, very challenging time economically for our country.

And what was it that was put into place, I should say not just a few weeks after he became President, as has been the case here, but after 6 months of going through a very deliberative process? We put into place in May of 1981 what was known as the Gramm-Latta budget package that reduced the rate of spending by the Federal Government by 17 percent. And in August of 1981, we put into place the Conable-Hance tax package, which reduced marginal rates and doubled the flow of revenues to the Federal Treasury through the decade of the 1980s.

Yes, there was a great deal of spending—a lot of spending on defense, a lot of other spending that took place from this Congress—but we still saw that surge in the flow of revenues to the Federal Treasury.

So we have the ideological bags of the past. Secretary Morgenthau referred to the fact that they spent more money than they ever spent before, and yet they had an unemployment rate that was as high as when they started. And we had John F. Kennedy and Ronald Reagan, who has these bold, dynamic, robust marginal rate reduction packages that created a surge and flow of revenues to the Treasury by reducing marginal tax rates. That's what we should be doing today. And I think that using things like our fair and simple tax plan as a model for that would help us deal with the challenges that we have.

I thank my friend for the hard work that he has put in on a wide range of projects. I'm pleased to sit with him in the leadership of this great institution. We meet regularly and sit next to each other in those meetings, and he always has a very, very insightful and thoughtful proposal on a regular basis. And I believe that it really stems from what I began talking about, and that is that Texas common sense. So I thank my friend for yielding.

Mr. CARTER. And I thank you for your comments, my friend from California. Mr. DREIER, as we have well seen, is very knowledgeable in the concepts of this House and how it operates, and the history of this House and what the history tells us.

I want to thank both my colleagues for coming out here today. And, quite frankly, we have been asked by and challenged by the administration to put forth ideas. I would hope that the White House is monitoring what was said by both of my colleagues here tonight as some ideas that ought to be looked at and considered. We really do want to work with the administration and share ideas. And we would really like to have a world where nothing is off base, because obviously the two parties disagree on a lot of policy, but a free flow of information and ideas is what the American people expect us to do. And I think we heard two gentlemen tonight who put forth different, but similar, ideas as to how to simplify our lives and how to turn things around.

To me, bipartisan is not, "here's our bill, if you vote for it, we're bipartisan." Bipartisan is, we sit down and we discuss the issues, sometimes one at a time. And when we conclude, we hear both sides, and then people are willing to give and take to make it work.

You know, if the President of the United States told us when he was elected that he was vehemently opposed to earmarks, that he was going to do everything he could to get rid of earmarks, and if he finds spending in a bill that everyone would acknowledge is an earmark and he chooses to veto that bill because it goes against what he told the American people his principles were and the Republicans help support that veto because they agree with the principles that he put forward, that is certainly bipartisanship—and that opportunity may actually arise over the Omnibus bill that we passed today with the 9,000 some odd earmarks that are contained therein. So that's bipartisanship. Listening to what Mr. DREIER and Mr. BURGESS have to say and not dismissing it out of hand, that's bipartisanship.

And so, that's kind of an aside from what I'm here to talk about tonight. But I'm really grateful for my colleagues to come in here and put these ideas out on the table because I think they're good ideas. And I don't necessarily agree completely with every one of them, but I'm certainly willing to listen. And I think our President has told us he is willing to listen. And I take him at his word. I think he is, and I hope he will. And I feel good about it; I think he will.

Now, I've talked about ethical issues tonight, I'm going to talk about them some more because there's a lot more that we can talk about. And they are issues that are important. And I'm trying to be friendly about it, but make no mistake, I have spent 26 years of my life making sure that the laws of my State are abided by. And people who violate those laws, after all of their rights are protected under the Constitution, if they are convicted of doing something wrong, I honestly believe they should be punished. And I've been involved in that also.

So, although I try to be friendly about this discussion—and I will continue to try to be friendly because the American people are tired of mean spiritedness—I want everyone to understand that, from my personal belief, everyone is entitled to their day in court, everyone is entitled to be presumed innocent. I'm not making accusations that you should consider convictions. But should there be a conviction, I believe that this body is not above the law, and we should keep it that way. And I will pledge myself to do so. And I think every Member of this body would feel the same way. And that's why these little ethical slips give the impression that somebody might be above the law.

We are a nation of laws, we are not a nation of men. And being a nation of laws, we expect everyone, no matter what their status, to abide by those laws. This body is a body of rules, and we expect Members of this body to abide by those rules; and the failure to abide has consequences.

So even though I'm trying to be as friendly as I can on these issues, I want everybody to understand that those are principles that this country stands on and that this body stands on, and I intend to make sure that those principles stand firm. I think my colleagues across the board, both sides of the aisle, in their heart of hearts will agree with me. And I think it was a right policy when a Member, even though a close, personal friend of mine, was accused of something, that under our rules he had to step down until his issues were resolved. And I think it's unfortunate that the Democrats, under their rules, don't take the same position; that if a serious accusation of misbehavior or breaking the law is raised against a Member in the form of an indictment, that that person has to step down from positions of leadership. Both sides should have the same rules. Unfortunately, we don't have it that way.

Still, I defend every person's right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. And I will stand for any Member of this House, no matter what his party affiliation, to preserve that right on his behalf because I have preserved that right on behalf of thousands of people who were convicted by a jury of their peers of heinous crimes, and yet that was a right guaranteed by our Constitution. It's a right guaranteed to our Members. So make no mistake, I make no accusations of guilt because that's not appropriate under our system, but I do raise questions of ethical lapses, and I will continue to do so.

I thank the Speaker for allowing me to speak here tonight. I'm going to yield back my time now. And I want to thank my colleagues who joined me here tonight. And we will be doing some more of this, and I hope other colleagues will join us and give us their ideas.

The amendment to be offered by Representative Conyers or a designee to H.R. 1106, the Helping Families Save Their Homes Act of 2009, does not contain any congress-sional earmarks, limited tax benefits, or limited tariff benefits as defined in clause 9(d), 9(e), or 9(f) of Rule XXI.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

EARMARK DECLARATION

HON. PETER J. ROSKAM

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. ROSKAM. Madam Speaker, pursuant to the House Republican standards on earmarks, I am submitting the following information for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD regarding earmarks I received as part of H.R. 1105, the Omnibus Appropriations Act of Fiscal Year 2009.

As I have stated on the floor previously, I am a true believer in the need for increased transparency through the earmark process—whether in appropriations, authorizing or tax-writing legislation. It is important that the Illinois taxpayer can judge for themselves the funds that we spend at the federal level.

I appreciate this opportunity to discuss how taxpayer funds are spent in my congressional district. As a Member of Congress I was elected to this body to fight for the needs of my constituents.

My constituents elected me to Congress because I am serious about accountability and transparency in the budget process. I take a deliberative approach to project requests to ensure that any request with my name on it is worthy of federal funding. The key ingredients I look for in any project are job creation, opportunities to support Illinois' efforts in keeping us globally competitive, a guarantee that the project will not rely solely on federal funding and can instead become viable in the private sector.

Most important to me is to ensure taxpayer dollars are returned back to my constituents, who pay more to the federal government than they get back in government funded projects. Illinois taxpayers receive less federal funding per dollar of federal taxes paid compared to almost any state in the country. In 2005, Illinois citizens received only $.75 in the way of federal spending per dollar of federal taxes paid. This ranks the state 45th nationally and highlights the importance of my work to advocate for the priorities of my constituents on the federal level.

This is why I stand here today to advocate for the following projects I have secured in H.R. 1105, the Omnibus Appropriations Act of FY09:

FY09 COMMERCE, JUSTICE, SCIENCE APPROPRIATIONS

Congressman PETER J. ROSKAM (IL-6)

Department of Justice, OJP Byrne Discretionary Grants—$50,000 for Advocate Good Samaritan Hospital's Preventing and Addressing Domestic Violence Program (3815 Highland Avenue, Downers Grove, IL 60515)

With the growing numbers of reported domestic violence in DuPage County and throughout Illinois' 6th Congressional District, Advocate Good Samaritan seeks to strengthen and expand its current domestic violence program to ensure that both current and expected needs are met.

One in three American women is abused at some point in her life by an intimate partner. Domestic violence creates multiple health problems among victims and causes 100,000 days of hospitalization and 30,000 Emergency Room visits annually. With such startling statistics, Advocate Good Samaritan has teamed up with the Downers Grove Police Department to move forward on a comprehensive approach to addressing domestic violence in the community.

The federal funds I have obtained will be utilized to expand the successful partnership by providing internal education and debriefing/consultation on domestic violence cases in order to increase awareness. This funding will allow Advocate Good Samaritan to provide customized trainings internally within Advocate (including parish nurses) and to local agencies which serve as strategic points of entry (emergency departments, local police departments, and faith-based organizations). This will increase its outreach efforts to community organizations, including a major focus on large corporations in the community and the training employers to recognize and work with employees who may be victims of domestic violence. Other plans of expansion include an expanding website, a regional domestic violence awareness program, and purchase and distribution of educational materials to increase awareness among and educate the public about domestic violence. Along with matching funds from the hospital of $25,000, Advocate will also be able to leverage its involvement in the Corporate Alliance to End Partner Violence for additional funds.

Department of Justice, COPS Law Enforcement Technology—$200,000 for the DuPage County Sheriff's Department (501 N. County Farm Road, Wheaton, IL 60187)

One of the lessons learned from the tragedy of September 11th was the inability of first responders and public safety agencies to communicate. To meet the requirements of the National Telecommunications & Information Administration, the State of Illinois is in the process of implementing a statewide interoperable radio system (STARCOM21). Subsequently, the DuPage County Emergency Telephone System Board (ETSB) awarded a contract based on the state bid to purchase the interoperable radio equipment for public safety agencies in DuPage County.

In recent years, DuPage County has experienced a number of natural disasters including tornados, floods and last August, a major storm that cut a swath across the entire county impairing first responder communication among municipal police, fire agencies and other public safety agencies and hampering rescue efforts. Over 8,000 9-1-1 calls were received during the storm.

Chicago and O'Hare International Airport are located at the northeast border of DuPage

County and it is vital for DuPage County police and fire agencies to communicate via radio with Cook County and Chicago in the event of a major urban or terrorists' threat at O'Hare or in Chicago. A radio system connected to STARCOM21 will enable regional communication.

The objective of the ETSB project is to provide 6,000 users (first responders, police, fire, homeland security & public works) with a seamless 700–800MHz interoperable radio platform throughout the county and the state via STARCOM21. Each participant in the ETSB (which includes DuPage and portions of Cook, Kane & Will Counties) is required to purchase their own radios (6,000 countywide) under this new system at a cost of $5,213 per radio.

To Federal funds obtained for this entity will be used to purchase 40 radios for municipalities in DuPage County that will be compatible with the new statewide interoperable radio system (STARCOM21). This funding will be leveraged with a state grant DuPage County obtained of $430,000 that will cover the purchase of 83 of the required 411 radios needed. The Sheriff's Office will assume all operations costs of the new radio system and the cost of purchasing the remaining radios.

Department of Justice, COPS Law Enforcement Technology—$75,000 for the Northern Illinois Police Alarm System (675 Village Court, Glencoe, IL 60022)

The Northern Illinois Police Alarm System (NIPAS) Emergency Services Team (EST) is responsible for law enforcement coverage of 68 member towns with a total population of approximately 1.8 million residents. In 1982, severe flooding nearly devastated several small communities along the shores of Lake Michigan north of Chicago. Public safety resources, especially those of law enforcement agencies, became stretched to the limit. Although neighboring communities responded with assistance, police leaders realized they needed an organized system with pre-planned deployment procedures. The following year, fifteen police agencies in Illinois' northern Cook and southern Lake Counties established NIPAS through an intergovernmental mutual aid agreement. This authorized neighboring agencies to work together in times of need.

Whether faced with a natural disaster, or the unexpected results of a special event, NIPAS member Police Departments may request assistance that is needed when the individual Police Department cannot respond accordingly on its own to an event. They can use NIPAS in three key areas: call for additional patrol cars, call for the NIPAS Mobile Field Force, and call for the NIPAS Emergency Service Team.

Federal funds I have obtained in this bill, along with Representative SCHAKOWSKY (IL-9), will be used for the purchase of atmospheric detection equipment for the NIPAS

Emergency Services Team—needed equipment sorely lacking at NIPAS member Police Departments. Atmospheric detection equipment is needed to allow NIPAS law enforcement officers the ability to respond to crimes or other incidents involving hazardous environments, explosive devices, arson materials, and narcotics. Communities in my district whom have advocated a great need for such equipment included Bartlett, Elk Grove Village, Elmhurst, Hanover Park, Mount Prospect, Roselle, Streamwood, and Villa Park. Funding this one Regional Law Enforcement project will allow 8 Police Departments in IL-6 Police by equipping and training 10 police officers with one Congressional appropriation project. The project will also train and equip additional 71 Police officers outside of my district to respond to mutual aid request for emergency services related to HAZMAT incidents within my district. This mutual aid format response mechanism will save millions of dollars compared to each Police Department trying to deploy its own duplicative and smaller/ineffective (due to the cost of equipment) HAZMAT emergency services team. NIPAS is matching this federal funding with $150,000 of their own money.

Department of Justice, DJP—Juvenile Justice—$175,000 for the DuPage County Area Project (DuCAP) (2037 Bloomingdale Road, Suite 206, Glendale Heights, IL 60139)

Federal funds I have obtained will be used for DuCAP's Providing Positive Choices for Youth program. This will improve the futures of at-risk youth impacted by gangs and youth violence. Funding will strengthen four existing community-based youth organizations and will create additional community organizations focused on underserved communities in the western suburbs of northern DuPage County. DuCAP has historically been successful in addressing the issues of at-risk youth and their families. DuCAP's track record and experience over the past 18 years has demonstrated that developing and nurturing grassroots, community-based organizations creates stronger, more responsive communities. The residents of these communities can mobilize resources to fill voids in services, and create opportunities for youth engagement, that serve to limit involvement in gangs, youth violence, and substance abuse.

FY09, LABOR, HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, EDUCATION APPROPRIATIONS

Department of Education, Elementary & Secondary Education (Includes FIE)—$238,000 for the Streamwood High School—School District U-46 (355 East Chicago Street, Elgin, IL 60120)

Federal funding will be utilized for School District U-46 execution and implementation of the Manufacturing Career Exploration project. A 12-week pilot program will be implemented at Streamwood High School and then be expanded to the additional five high schools in the school district.

Manufacturers in the western suburbs of Chicago share a widespread and common need for a skilled workforce, especially for those who want to build careers in manufacturing. Many manufacturers are employing advanced technologists that require a workforce with skills and the ongoing learning and skills upgrades. Firms report that many good potential entry level workers need basic math and English skills. Manufacturers report existing workers and skilled workers shortages. The forecasts indicate that many more jobs will go unfilled in America unless we train our young students now. Good jobs in manufacturing exist but we need a pipeline of students trained to fill these jobs.

The Manufacturing Career Exploration project offers a comprehensive solution in this manufacturing facility heavy area of the country. The skills taught through this program will allow the future U.S. workforce gain the appropriate knowledge required to succeed in the growing advanced manufacturing sector, and more broadly, in the increasingly competitive global economy.

The precision metalworking industry offers a variety of jobs from basic parts layout to computer numerical controlled programmers, from machinist to managers, from mold makers to engineers, from salesperson to human resource directors, each with its own educational requirements. Regardless of what position it is looking to fill, industry looks for qualified applicants who have a first-hand knowledge of machine tooling. It is for this reason that the need for this task-oriented, problem solving, knowledgeable, worker be developed within a high school curriculum.

The Streamwood Manufacturing Career Exploration has three major objectives:

1. To demonstrate the inter-relatedness of precision metal working, math and communication.
2. To ensure that all students in the Streamwood High School Plan are oriented toward the world of work and higher education.
3. To ensure that all students in The Manufacturing Career Exploration are oriented toward the world of work and higher education.

With no consistent funding available at the Department of Education, these federal funds obtained will be useful in kick starting the program off the ground and allow for continued growth as the program in the future seeks to leverage funds with private industry in the area to keep the program on track.

Department of Education, Higher Education (Includes FIPSE)—$381,000 for the College of DuPage (425 Fawell Boulevard, Glen Ellyn, IL 60137)

The College of DuPage is looking to be a lead institution in becoming more veteran friendly; working to identify issues and seeking the means to aid veterans in their transition to civilian life. Therefore, the federal funding I have obtained, along with Senator DURBIN (IL), will be utilized to implement curriculum, clinical training and on-going professional development coursework to prepare professionals to counsel returning veterans. This curriculum will include:

Phase I—A certificate for Master's prepared clinicians offered through the College of DuPage Human Services Department.

Phase II—Training of College counseling staff that could assist in the development of a Counseling Center.

Phase III—Faculty conversion of curriculum for online delivery in accordance with accreditation standards of the Human Services Department.

Phase IV—Implementation of the Associate in Applied Science Degree option, which will train students to assist graduate clinicians in the field of Veteran Counseling.

As our military personnel return home, one of the biggest challenges will be to transition the veteran into family life, education, and the workforce. In addition, significant numbers of veterans are returning from Iraq and Afghanistan suffering brain trauma injury and delayed stress syndrome. This program is designed to get ahead of the curve in training professionals who can help the men and women address these needs. The funding will allow a variety of government initiatives to improve, including but not limited to:

Enhance services to ease transition of returning veterans into civilian life

Increase access to education and academic success

Partner with entities for on-going support

Proactively address employment and workforce development needs.

This project supports current federal initiatives specifically addressing the concept of supporting community colleges at a local level to focus on education, job retraining, and helping those who have given so much for our country. The federal funds obtained will allow the College of DuPage to respond to the needs of returning service men and women and the acknowledged shortage of health care workers.

Congressman PETER J. ROSKAM (IL-6)

Department of Health and Human Services, Centers for Disease Control and Prevention—$95,000 for Access Community Health Network's Martin Russo Health Center (245 South Gary Avenue, Suite 200, Bloomingdale, IL 60108)

I have obtained federal funding for the Martin Russo Health Center in my congressional district will be utilized to implement a model community-based heart health program for low income women. This program will offer a continuum of care to address heart disease, including preventative interventions, risk screenings, care management for women with identified risk factors, and cardiology consultation. The specific model to be implemented includes:

Prevention—provide education and address risk through smoking cessation, maintaining a healthy weight and being physically active.

Risk reduction—help women lower their blood pressure and reduce their cholesterol levels.

Care management—provide medical care management for women at risk for a heart attack due to underlying conditions such as congenital heart disease, heart attack and stroke history, diabetes, and hypertension.

Bio-psychosocial approach—screen for and attend to behavioral health conditions, including substance abuse and depression.

Pharmaceutical advocacy—help women develop strategies for obtaining affordable medications, through benefits counseling and leveraging 340B pricing.

Cardiology consultation—offer an integrated continuum of primary medical care and cardiology consultation as needed.

Nowhere in the greater Chicago area is there a one-stop resource that truly welcomes low income women to obtain, under one roof, the full range of education, prevention, risk assessment, medical management and specialty care services. This program has the ability to reduce emergency room abuse by addressing issues early—before they lead to complicated, expensive and permanent debilitation. Access Community Health Network will be matching this project by at least 50%, with the costs that include $110,000 for the cardiologist, $290,000 for behavioral health services (other medical providers), $140,000 for medical care management, and $460,000 for community education and outreach campaign.

Congressman PETER J. ROSKAM (IL—6)

Department of Health and Human Services, Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA) Health Facilities and Services—$143,000 for Adventist GlenOaks Hospital (701 Winthrop Avenue, Glendale Heights, IL 60139)

I obtained federal funding for Adventist GlenOaks Hospital in Glendale Heights, IL to be used for the purchase of new and updated surgical equipment, including minimally invasive technology. The current equipment is 25 years old and the demands of technology in the treatment of their patients has increased drastically. This equipment will provide the medical technology necessary in treating the patients at the hospital with the best possible outcomes, as well as becoming an important component of their key involvement in disaster preparedness for their service areas.

The need for these funds by the hospital are great, as Adventist GlenOaks Hospital is the only Medicaid Disproportionate Share hospital in DuPage County—with a steady increase in Medicaid patients each year. The hospital serves a disproportionate number of state and federally funded patients as well as a significant number of uninsured patients in comparison to other facilities in DuPage County. In 2007, the hospital provided over $6.3 million in community benefits and charity care. The total cost of the purchase of the equipment is $3 million. The GlenOaks Foundation has taken on the Surgical Services Department as their targeted fundraising project for the coming year and the $143,000 in federal funding going to this project will further help leverage their fundraising efforts in the private sector.

Department of Health and Human Services, Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA) Health Facilities and Services—$190,000 for the DuPage Convalescent Center (400 N. County Farm Road, Wheaton, IL 60187)

As the senior population in our communities continues to increase, it is ever more important to ensure these seniors have access to programs that will allow them to continue a healthy lifestyle that implements numerous preventative health measures. A particular focus on strength training has the added benefits of bone strengthening, improved balance and stability, greater endurance and energy, sleep improvement, prevention of falls and subsequent disability, improved neuromuscular coordination, enhanced cognitive functioning, improved energy metabolism, improved weight management, and improved ADL (activities of daily living) ability.

As such, I obtained $190,000 for the DuPage Convalescent Center's (DPCC)

Wellness Center in this appropriations bill. The federal funds will establish dual Wellness/Fitness Centers inside the Convalescent Center (1920 square feet). One will be adjacent to the Physical Therapy/Rehab Department that will serve the long and short term population at DPCC. The second area will be located on the Ground floor with direct access to an entrance and parking accommodations so that seniors from the community will have easy access. The Wellness Center would serve approximately 430 short-term residents during their stay on the sub-acute unit with an anticipated enrollment of approximately 80% of this population once they return to the community. In addition, about 65%–70% of residents enrolled in current Physical Rehab programming will be able to participate in the Wellness center and this roughly translates to about 120 long-term convalescent center residents.

The federal funding will go specifically for the purchase of equipment and upgrades to the Wellness Center. DuPage County will provide the funds for staffing the center with a full-time Fitness Specialist and a part-time Case Manager. The County will also collaborate with local townships and municipalities and senior agencies to help provide transportation services for eligible seniors. This comprehensive Wellness Center will enable seniors to live in the community for as long as they can, which coincides with current federal initiatives that have dollars focused on successful aging in place, decreasing healthcare costs and helping improve quality of life.

Department of Education, National Projects, Innovation and Improvement Teach for America as authorized under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act—$4,965,000 for the Reach Out and Read National Center (56 Roland Street, Suite 100—D, Boston, MA 02129)

Too many children today arrive on their first day of kindergarten unprepared to learn, which places them at a disadvantage before even starting school. An extensive body of research now clearly documents the importance of early language and literacy skills in preparing children for later success in reading and in school. Yet today, a large number of children and their families do not receive the support and assistance they need to develop these essential skills and prepare to start kindergarten ready to learn. This is why I was supportive of federal funding for this important national program.

Through Reach Out and Read, nearly 50,000 doctors and nurses have been trained nationwide in ROR's proven strategies of early language and literacy development. Pediatricians and other healthcare providers guide and encourage parents at every pediatric check-up to read aloud to their children from the earliest months of life. Currently, more than 3,500 clinics and hospitals are implementing the program, reaching more than 25% of America's at-risk children.

Specifically, Reach Out and Read:

Makes literacy promotion a standard part of pediatric primary care, so that children grow up with books, language skills, and the ability to read;

Trains doctors and nurses to advise parents about the importance of reading aloud, and gives books to children at pediatric check-ups, with a special focus on disadvantaged children and those growing up in poverty; and Helps families and communities encourage early literacy skills by building on the unique relationships between parents and their children's pediatricians.

ROR is nationally and internationally respected, with proven results, deserves Congressional support. In 2007, Reach Out and Read received one of the five prestigious United Nations' Confucius Prizes for Literacy, the only American program to be so honored. In 2006, the White House Conference on Global Literacy, hosted by First Lady Laura Bush, highlighted nine successful literacy-promotion models, of which Reach Out and Read was again the only American program showcased.

Congressman PETER J. ROSKAM (IL—6)

Department of Education, National Projects, Innovation and Improvement Reading is Fundamental as authorized under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act—$24,803,000 for Reading is Fundamental (1825 Connecticut Avenue, NW, Washington, DC 20009)

Reading is Fundamental (authorized under Title V, Part D, Subpart 5) prepares children to read by delivering free books and resources to those children who need them most. RIF's book distribution program hands out 16 million books annually to the nation's youngest and most at-risk children.

In the President's proposed fiscal year 2009 budget, funding for this integral program was eliminated. This successful program directly benefited over 146,000 children in the State of Illinois in 2007, which is why I advocated that instead of eliminating funded in the FY09 budget, to allow federal funds to flow so that we can continue to reach underserved children from birth to age 8 and better prepare them for their educational future.

All RIF programs combine three essential elements to foster children's literacy: reading motivation, family and community involvement, and the excitement of choosing free books to keep. Therefore, I am proud to stand up in support of this most important national project.

Department of Education, National Projects, Safe Schools and Citizenship Education, Civic Education Program for activities authorized under the Education for Democracy Act—$25,095,000 for the Center for Civic Education (5145 Douglas Fir Road, Calabasas, CA 91302)

I rise in strong support of the federal funding I played a role in obtaining for this most important national program. The Education for Democracy Act's domestic and international civic education programs—which reach approximately 5 million students each year—has been demonstrated by independent research and evaluation. In addition, economic education exchange programs supported by the Act reached 2.9 million students in 2006–2007. These programs make a significant contribution to our country's commitment to strengthening freedom and democracy in the United States in emerging democracies throughout the world.

Over the course of my first term in Congress, I visited classrooms in my district on a weekly basis. Every teacher I met during the course of my visits touted the success of the civic education programs, the benefits to their students, and the need for Congress to continue supporting such a successful program. As such I supported federally funding this project in the FY09 Appropriations Bill.

The Education for Democracy Act funds valuable initiatives that have been proven to increase students' fundamental understanding of democracy, improve the school environment, and increase academic achievement. Independent evaluations testify to these initiatives' success in promoting civic and economic knowledge; intellectual and participatory skills; and civic dispositions such as civility, tolerance, respect for the rule of law, and a reasoned commitment to the fundamental values and principles of constitutional democracy.

FY09 ENERGY AND WATER DEVELOPMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Department of Energy, Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy/Vehicle Technologies: $209,330 for Storage Tanks & Dispensers for E85 and Bio-Diesel for the Forest Preserve District of DuPage County (3S580 Naperville Road, Wheaton, IL 60187)

In 2001, the Forest Preserve District of DuPage County embarked on a 10-year initiative to convert its entire fleet of vehicles from standard gasoline or diesel-powered engines to vehicles that run on alternative fuels such as compressed natural gas (CNG), liquefied propane (LP), ethanol (E85), and soy bio-diesel. I am proud to partner with the DuPage Forest Preserve District in this important initiative. This effort represents the sort of good-government work that the American people expect. In the long-term, this full-fleet conversion will save the District hundreds of thousands of dollars on future fuel purchases, in addition to greatly reducing tailpipe emissions and ozone pollution. Furthermore, continued application of this technology will serve as a catalyst for even wider usage and availability to the general public. Previously, the District used $612,000 to fund the CNG and LP portions of this alternative fueling station. I secured this funding for the District to complete these other phases of the project and advance the transition to an all alternative-fuel fleet by adding E85 and bio-diesel fuel dispensers, and to allow other governmental agencies in the region to fuel their alternative fuel vehicles at the site.

Army Corps of Engineers/Construction: $7,500,000 for the Des Plaines River, through the City of Des Plaines, Illinois (1420 Miner Street, Des Plaines, IL 60016)

In the past couple of years we have seen severe flooding in the Chicagoland area. This past September we were inundated with one of the worst rainstorms in our history, prompting the President to declare our area a federal disaster area. That is why I have secured this important funding for the expansion of Big Bend Lake and for lowering the normal lake level. These changes will provide an additional 587 acre-feet of storage for enhanced flood mitigation. The overall project helps 33 municipalities in Cook and Lake Counties in Illinois. The Des Plaines River has a long history of flooding that has caused significant economic losses. Recurrent flooding along the Des Plaines River causes estimated average annual damage in the amount of $25,228,500 (69% traffic damages, 20% residential damages, 8% commercial/industrial/public damages, 3% emergency services costs). Statutory authorization for this project is provided in the Water Resources Development Act of 1999 (Public Law 106-53), and a Project Co-operation Agreement has been signed by Army Corps and Illinois Department of Natural Resources. I am grateful that the American people have entrusted us with these precious resources to advance this project and enhance our region's flood mitigation and Great Lakes water quality initiatives.

Army Corps of Engineers/Construction: $28,709,000 for the McCook and Thornton Reservoirs, through the Metropolitan Water Reclamation District of Greater Chicago (100 East Erie Street, Chicago, IL 60611)

The recurrence of major flooding in the Chicago area, particularly in recent years, has demonstrated the great need for the advancement of the Chicago Underflow Plan (CUP), the regional flood control element of the Tunnel and Reservoir Plan (TARP) of the Metropolitan Water Reclamation District of Greater Chicago. This funding will be used to continue on-going design and construction of the McCook Reservoir, a key component of the TARP, a long-term comprehensive flood pollution control solution for Chicago and its 51 surrounding communities. The McCook Reservoir is currently under construction, and when completed will have a total water capacity of 7 billion gallons, provide more than $90 million per year in benefits to 3.1 million people in 37 communities, and protect more than 1 million structures. Completing the McCook and Thornton Reservoirs and bringing them fully on-line is crucial to local communities, the health of Lake Michigan and its tributaries, and to the economic development of the region. I am pleased to support this project, and to have secured funds for it. The larger effort will provide a series of underground tunnels and storage reservoirs designed to address combined sewer overflow discharges. Without timely completion of the project, communities will face decreased drinking water allocations, significant decreases in water quality and thousands of homes will be vulnerable to flooding. This system has been enormously effective in achieving its goal as evidenced by the elimination of 85% of the combined sewage pollution in a 325 square mile area. Statutory authorization for this request is provided in Public Law 100-676, and the project was included in the President's FY2009 budget request in the amount of $34,000,000. This is clearly the sort of good and necessary infrastructure project that the American people need and desire, which is why I am pleased to have served a role in securing these funds.

Army Corps of Engineers/Construction: $5,750,000 for the Chicago Sanitary & Ship Canal Dispersal Barriers, through the U.S. Army Engineer District, Chicago (111 North Canal Street, Suite 600, Chicago, IL 60606)

Our Great Lakes are an environmental treasure for our region, and it is incumbent upon us to provide for their healthy preservation for future generations. Accordingly, I worked with a bipartisan group of my colleagues to secure funding for this important initiative. Historically, the Great Lakes and the Mississippi River were separated naturally by a landmass, but since the completion of the Chicago Sanitary and Ship Canal, aquatic species can move freely between the two water systems. A temporary dispersal barrier (Barrier I) has been operating for nearly six years, and construction of a permanent barrier (Barrier II) will be completed this year. Without these barriers, Lake Michigan, and the rest of the Great Lakes, would be vulnerable to aquatic invasive species like the Asian Carp. Funding is needed for the operations of both barriers and to begin construction of the conversion of Barrier I into a permanent barrier. This project is authorized by the Water Resources Development Act of 2007 (Public Law 110-114, Section 3061), and the President's budget recommended $6.25 million. Providing these funds serves my constituents who enjoy the Great Lakes, and every American who travels to the Great Lakes region to enjoy these national treasures.

FY09 INTERIOR AND ENVIRONMENT APPROPRIATIONS

EPA/STAG Water and Wastewater Infrastructure Project: $500,000 for a Public Well in the Village of Bartlett, Illinois (228 S. Main Street, Bartlett, IL 60103)

I am pleased to have secured funds for the people of Bartlett, Illinois. These much-needed funds will expand the availability of clean water for my constituents. Due to new industrial and residential development, the Village must install a new well to meet the maximum daily demands of residents and businesses on the west side of town. The addition of a new well in Bartlett is essential to expanding the Village's ability to efficiently provide potable water to residents living in current and future residential developments as well as the surrounding industrial and commercial business parks. The new well will also increase the availability of water for the local fire protection district responding to fires on the west side of Bartlett. The well would require a radium and barium removal system to be installed in order for the well water to meet the current federal standards of the Environmental Protection Agency. Because the project is a public well, it is eligible for funding under the Drinking Water State Revolving Fund (from the STAG Water and Wastewater Infrastructure Project account), authorized by the Safe Drinking Water Act. The Village of Bartlett demonstrated an ability to commit more than $1,000,000 to the project, far in excess of the 45% commitment required for federal funds. It is my honor to have secured federal funds for a worthy project such as this, and I believe that this project serves as a good example of how federal funds can leverage local dollars to serve the American people with tangible quality of life enhancements.

FY09 TRANSPORTATION-HUD APPROPRIATIONS

HUD/EDI: $142,500 for Marklund Philip Center for Children in Bloomingdale, Illinois (164 S. Prairie Avenue, Bloomingdale, IL 60108)

I am honored to partner with the Marklund Philip Center for Children, and humbled to be a part of their work through this funding. This educational facility in Bloomingdale, Illinois, houses a pediatric nursing facility for infants, children and medically fragile adults, an education program for children ages 3 to 21, and a respite care program. Serving among others infants and children with severe and profound developmental disabilities who are Medicaid-eligible, this facility provides a tremendous service and benefit to the surrounding community. In such a time of upheaval in our public life, the people at Marklund serve as shining example of service for those in need.

FHWA/Transportation and Community and System Preservation: $475,000 for the Busse Woods Trail and Illinois Route 72 Bicycle Overpass in Elk Grove Village, Illinois (901 Wellington Avenue, Elk Grove Village, IL 60007)

I am pleased to be able to stand alongside Elk Grove Village having secured these funds to provide a greater measure of safety for our friends and family, and enhance the regional trail system that benefits our area. Federal funding provided for this project will be used for the construction of a bicycle overpass to replace the existing at-grade path crossing the six lane arterial roadway at the signalized intersection of Illinois Route 72 and the Interstate 290 ramps. The roadway carries in excess of 40,000 vehicles per day and the ramps carry nearly 15,000 vehicles per day. These heavy traffic volumes coupled with the high vehicular speeds from vehicles exiting the interstate create a hazardous crossing for bicyclists and pedestrians. The proposed overpass would link the trail systems of the Illinois Prairie Path and the Fox River Trail systems and would remove vehicular conflict with bicyclist and pedestrian traffic on this regional trail system. Part of the State's transportation improvement plan, these safety enhancements will improve the regional trail system, and represent a commonsense solution to which our public resources can be applied with great benefit.

FTA/New Starts-Fixed Guideway: $4,800,000 for the Metra Union Pacific West Line through Metra (547 W. Jackson Boulevard, 13th Floor, Chicago, IL 60661)

In a regional area plagued with congestion, and a nation struggling with dependence on foreign energy, projects like these are needed catalysts for growth in transportation options for the American people. I was glad to have worked in a bipartisan fashion to secure these funds. Metra's Union Pacific West (UP-W) Line project will build upon the recent extension to Elburn and create needed capacity while continuing to deliver safe, reliable and affordable service to Metra riders. This funding will provide new corridor improvements key to addressing freight congestion. The UP-W Line extends nearly 44 miles west from Ogilvie Transportation Center in downtown Chicago. Along that corridor, it serves 18 outlying stations within Kane, DuPage and Cook Counties. The line currently offers 59 commuter trains per weekday, 29 inbound and 30 outbound, with passengers making approximately 30,000 daily trips. The substantial residential growth in this region is fueling a corresponding demand for increased service; employment in the UP-W corridor is expected to increase more than 100 percent by 2030. SAFETEA-

LU authorized the UP-W Line improvements, and this federal funding will allow Metra to offer UP-W Line commuters more express trains and more reverse commuter trains. I was pleased to work on securing these funds because I believe these increased services and options will add to our region's economic potential and serve as an example for how efficient public transportation can serve the public interest so well.

FTA/New Starts-Fixed Guideway: $4,800,000 for the Metra STAR Line through Metra (547 W. Jackson Boulevard, 13th Floor, Chicago, IL 60661)

I have been so pleased to be a part of this STAR Line project because it truly represents a foundational effort to provide new and creative forms of transportation. This funding is needed for preliminary engineering of the STAR Line. There is considerable support among my colleagues and myself in the Illinois Delegation for this bold, new initiative that will link more than 100 communities in the Chicagoland region with new service and provide new connections between existing commuter rail lines, as well as a potential new station at O'Hare International Airport. Metra's proposed STAR Line goes beyond providing a service to a single corridor or portion of the suburban areas. Rather, the STAR Line establishes key rail connections throughout the northwest, west, and southwest suburbs, and also offers the basis for expanded suburban rail service in the future. The STAR Line holds the potential to provide a long-needed alternative to the automobile for nearly 1.2 million employees who commute to work at businesses located along the proposed alignment. It also provides an effective and proven transportation option to nearly 1.6 million residents who today live in an area chronically plagued by highway congestion. By linking nearly 100 suburban communities around Chicago, the STAR Line would fill a critical void in inter-suburban travel with this revolutionary system. This project is vital to the region in terms of alleviating traffic congestion, providing new commuting opportunities, and linking communities and places of business with new service. This project was authorized in SAFETEA-LU. I am glad these funds have been made available because this project demonstrates the sort of growth-oriented effort that my constituents and the American people expect when investing public resources.

FTA/Alternatives Analysis Program: $237,500 for Alternatives Analysis for Pace Suburban Bus Service in Arlington Heights, Illinois (550 W. Algonquin Road, Arlington Heights, IL 60005)

This effort is a worthy one, and one for which I was glad to advocate and secure funding. Pace will use these federal funds to perform the federally required Alternatives Analysis study on the proposed "J-Route" Bus Rapid Transit (BRT) project. This project will create a high-speed transit option for commuters in the western suburbs of Chicago between Schaumburg, O'Hare Airport, Oakbrook and Naperville. BRT is based on signal priority for buses at traffic signals along arterial routes, roadway improvements, real-time travel information signs at significant stops along the route using the Intelligent Bus System already installed on all Pace buses, and dissemination of real-time travel information to passengers, dispatchers, planners, and customer relations staff using a variety of electronic media. The federal government has supported the capital costs of public transit improvements for decades, and this project would enhance Illinois' transportation infrastructure while promoting economic growth. I am pleased to have secured funding for such a project that will do much to add to the service Pace offers and the opportunity it provides to its users.

Description of Request: $381,000 in funding is provided through the HRSA Health Facility Grant program to purchase portable dental equipment that will help establish the Iowa Mission of Mercy (MOM) project to deliver free dental care to underserved populations. The Iowa Department of Public Health will use the operatories throughout the year in public health settings such as Iowa rural clinics, schools and nursing facilities to enhance access to oral health care when the Iowa Dental Foundation is not using them during a MOM project. MOM projects have been used successfully in other states to deliver free dental care given by volunteer dentists and their allied staff to underserved populations. The contribution that these programs can make to Iowa communities is substantial. For example, the Virginia Dental Association estimates that Virginia Mission of Mercy volunteer dental personnel have provided free dental care to more than 24,856 patients valued at more than $11.3 million.

Address of Requesting Entity: 1750 Beardshear Hall, Ames, IA 50011

Description of Request: Iowa State University's College of Veterinary Medicine is provided with $666,000 in funding to expand and equip a new, modular Biosafety Level 3 laboratory, in order to develop strategies for safeguarding Iowa's animal agriculture and human populations from highly infectious diseases. Iowa State University's College of Veterinary Medicine long has been preeminent in the field of infectious diseases research in domestic animals. Recently, the College has focused on research that addresses new strategies to prevent and control foreign animal and zoonotic diseases, which are pathogens carried by animals that may be spread to humans.

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Mercy Medical Center—North Iowa

Address of Requesting Entity: 1000 4th Street SW, Mason City, IA 50401

Description of Request: $190,000 is provided through the HRSA Health Facility Grant program for hardware, software and training to implement an automated medical record system in the intensive care unit (ICU) at Mercy Medical Center—North Iowa. This system uses a bedside device to capture and integrate ICU monitor data, and provides a centralized place in the patient's Electronic Health Record to view patient data trends, document patient findings, update physician orders, and receive important notifications. The system allows the information to be viewed by the patient's physician over a secure connection from locations in surrounding rural areas. The result of integrating the automated electronic health record with the ICU unit will be increased patient safety and reduced medical errors. National studies have shown that as many as 16 percent of patients admitted to an ICU experience a human error, and that these errors can add significantly to length of stay, morbidity and costs. The Medical Center employs approximately 100 primary care health providers in very rural settings with the Mason City hospital being the hub of the integrated network, which will contribute to and benefit from this initiative.

Account: Department of Agriculture, Agriculture Research Service Salaries and Expenses: $1,474,000

Legal Name of Recipient Entity: USDA-ARS Cropping Systems Research Laboratory

Address of Recipient Entity: 3810 Fourth Street, Lubbock, TX 79415.

Description of Request: The Administration's FY09 budget request to Congress proposed to eliminate funding for two research programs at the ARS Cropping Systems Research Lab in Lubbock. This request allows continued funding of the Lab's sorghum cold tolerance research ($246,000), which is leading to a better understanding of how drought tolerance functions in sorghum and screening techniques to assist plant breeders in rapidly identifying and moving those genes into improved germplasm. The request also allows continued funding of the Lab's Cotton Production and Processing Unit ($1,228,000). The Unit is the only ARS facility that works on quality issues related to mechanical stripper cotton. The Unit also has a particulate matter analysis lab used to support USDA air quality work.

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Environmental Protection Agency, State and Tribal Assistance Grants: $200,000

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: City of Lubbock, TX

Address of Requesting Entity: 1635 13th Street, Lubbock, Texas 79457

Description of Request: These federal funds, along with a 45% match from the City of Lubbock, will be used for engineering costs to enable the city to move forward with constructing a terminal water storage reservoir and a membrane water treatment plant southeast of Lubbock, which will allow the City to make use of an additional water source to replace declining water supply. Projections indicate Lubbock, and the surrounding rural communities its water system serves, will need this water by 2012. This project's total cost is $46 million and also includes new pipeline and pump stations; a majority of funding for the project comes from state and local sources.

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Department of Health and Human Services, Health Resources and Services Administration: $238,000

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Muleshoe Area Hospital Center

Address of Requesting Entity: 708 S First Street, Muleshoe, Texas 79347

Description of Request: The Muleshoe Area Hospital Center is a Critical Access Hospital that serves a large rural area with a population of 17,000 and per capita income of $13,700. The hospital provides care to a growing Medicare population, a large number of uninsured patients and indigent patients. The hospital has one rural health clinic with one physician, and the area has three other family practice physicians in two different locations, neither of which are rural clinics. Funding would go toward the hospital's efforts to combine the two clinics and physicians into the hospital's clinic, including expanding and renovating the existing facility and new equipment. The hospital believes that combining physicians into one clinic will provide better health care services, allow mid-level practitioners to support physicians and help recruit additional physicians to the rural area. A main goal of the Center is to serve as a demonstration program that can easily be replicated by other institutions of higher education. The requested funding will be used for programmatic costs, specifically to: (1) determine and maximize the most effective methods of peer delivered support and empower persons in recovery to deliver these services; (2) provide an alternative peer community that combats the current "culture of drinking" on college campuses; (3) pursue research collaborations to improve programs that identify and meet the needs of students in recovery; and (4) develop an effective replication strategy and organizational plan to other institutions of higher education. The Center is currently working with the University of Texas-Austin, the University of Texas-San Antonio, the University of Colorado-Boulder and Tulsa Community College to form recovery centers at those campuses modeled after the one at Texas Tech. A cost share of $369,000 in state and local funds will be used with federal funds in FY09.

Many of the buses used for Citibus' services will be twelve years old and in need of replacement to better serve the Lubbock community. By purchasing hybrid electric buses, Citibus will be more environmentally friendly, and be less dependent on oil products; current technology electric hybrid buses will result in a 40% fuel savings over current usage. This bus purchase will be part of a multi-year Section 5309 request. Citibus would like to replace the fleet over a five year period at the rate of seven to eight buses per year.

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: City of Abilene Paratransit

Address of Requesting Entity: City of Abilene, PO Box 60, Abilene, TX 79604

Description of Request: Abilene operates an Americans with Disabilities Act-compliant paratransit service for persons whose physical or mental disability prevents them from using the accessible fixed-route bus service. However, Abilene's ability to meet the need for paratransit service is jeopardized due to heavy usage. The City has 22 vehicles but 18 vehicles have exceeded their Federal Transit Administration useful life limits. The City requested assistance in replacing five paratransit vans to meet the transportation needs of the City's disabled population. City of Abilene will provide a cost share of $120,000 for the $600,000 total cost of this project.

Department of Housing and Urban Development, Economic Development Initiatives: $142,500

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: City of Abilene

Address of Requesting Entity: City of Abilene, PO Box 60, Abilene, TX 79604

Description of Request: The Life Sciences Accelerator is a biotech facility located in a 20,000+ square foot building that will contain leased office space and laboratory facilities and research equipment to be "time-shared" by biotech company tenants. The Development Corporation of Abilene (DCOA), the economic development arm of the City of Abilene, has committed $4.85 million to the Accelerator, including the building and equipment—about a 95% local share. The Accelerator is part of a much larger biotech initiative by the City of Abilene/DCOA designed to diversify the regional economy through attraction of high-paying research jobs. Properly outfitted lease space is needed to attract companies that license these discoveries (intellectual property) from the new Texas Tech School of Pharmacy in Abilene and elsewhere for commercialization. These federal funds will go toward the $1 million needed for equipment for the Accelerator, such as an Amnis ImageStream imaging flow cytometer, for example, which is available at only 35 other sites in the world and will help make the Accelerator a "world class" research facility that attracts private investment and jobs.

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: The Ports to Plains Trade Corridor

Address of Requesting Entity: 5401 N MLK Blvd., Unit 395, Lubbock, TX 79403 (806) 775-3373

Description of Request: The Ports to Plains Trade Corridor is vital to the infrastructure of West Texas and will provide increased economic growth opportunities for Texas, and a recently-completed corridor management and development plan produced by the departments of transportation of Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico and Colorado projected that if completed, the corridor will create 40,000 new jobs with an economic impact of $4.5 billion. That will provide a benefit to cost ratio of 3:1. Big Spring is currently in the path of the federally-designated Ports-to-Plains Trade Corridor (section 1105(c) of ISTEA). While the Corridor will bring increased commerce, the increase of truck traffic will pose several safety hazards to the community. This commercial truck traffic, interspersed with community traffic along the current route, has slowed travel along this part of the Corridor. Due in most part to the grade changes and traffic signals, the increase of traffic through Big Spring threatens the safety and well-being of the city's residents. The US 87 reliever route will increase the fuel and speed efficiency when traveling US 87. The Ports-to-Plains Corridor has made significant strides in opening an alternative NAFTA trade route to the whole United States. This bypass will build on that success while resolving many safety and congestion issues.

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: National Aeronautics and Space Administration, Cross-Agency Support: $500,000

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Texas Tech University

Address of Requesting Entity: 2500 Broadway, Lubbock, TX 79409

Description of Request: The Engineering Support for Extended Human and Robotic Space Flight Missions initiative will provide engineering support for extended human & robotic space flight missions, which will directly contribute to NASA's initiative of returning to the moon and going to mars. For human and robotic missions the Center for Space Sciences is addressing the need for a decreased reliance on mission control due to the communication delays that occur in long distance missions. For human missions the Center is also addressing the need for greater autonomy in dealing with the physical needs of the astronauts, including long term water recycling, which currently limits the habitation period possible without re-supply, and the ergonomics and human factors aspects of human performance in zero and reduced gravity environments. The major research areas will include recyclable/renewable water resources, autonomous/renewable control systems and ergonomics/human factors crew support.

The NOAA Chesapeake Bay Office (NCBO) is working with federal, state, and local partners in Virginia to implement large-scale restoration and to support research to better manage the diseases that plague the oyster today. NCBO funds have supported extensive evaluation, survey, and initial monitoring efforts of an expanded partnership project, which now includes the Virginia Marine Resources Commission, Virginia Institute of Marine Science, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers Norfolk District, and the Chesapeake Bay Foundation. Account/Amount: Department of Commerce, NOAA Operations, Research and Facilities: $150,000

Project Description: The Chesapeake Bay supports a variety of recreationally and commercially important finfish species. These fisheries contribute up to $500 million to the Commonwealth's economy. The Virginia Trawl Survey is a long-term program that ensures the collection and reporting of critical data on the recruitment, current and future abundance, and general ecological health of the finfish populations in the Chesapeake Bay on an annual basis. Such information is used by the various agencies, including the Atlantic States Marine Fisheries Commission and the Commonwealth of Virginia to support management of key fisheries. Proper long-term management of these finfish resources ensures stability of both the ecology of the Bay and the economic livelihood of fishery participants. Discontinuation of the Virginia Trawl Survey would violate federal law and could prompt management agencies to declare Virginia out of compliance with state mandates. The impacts of noncompliance would be devastating as several of the Commonwealth's recreational and commercial fisheries, such as those for striped bass and summer flounder, would be closed.

Finance Plan:

VIMS funding: $367,789

Previously received over $1.2 million in federal appropriations. According to the Virginia Marine Resources Commission, the survey costs $800,000 annually to execute.

EARMARK DECLARATION

HON. DANA ROHRBACHER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. ROHRBACHER. Madam Speaker, pursuant to the requirements of the Republican Conference of the House, I am submitting the following information regarding earmarks I requested, which are included in the reported version of HR 1105, the Consolidated Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 2009.

Requesting Member: Congressman DANA ROHRBACHER (CA-46)

Bill Number: HR 1105, the Consolidated Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 2009.

Name of Project: Heim Bridge Replacement Project

Account: Federal Highway Administration (FHWA), TCSP—Transportation & Community & System Preservation

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Alameda Corridor Transportation Authority

Address of Requesting Entity: One Civic Plaza, Suite 350, Carson, CA 90745

Description of Request: I received $380,000 for the Alameda Corridor Transportation Authority's Alameda Corridor Project. The SR-47 Expressway project is a joint partnership between the Alameda Corridor Transportation Authority (ACTA) and the California Department of Transportation (Caltrans) to replace the State's seismically deficient Commodore Heim Bridge over Cerritos Channel and add a four lane elevated roadway to by-pass intersections and railroad crossings. The project will replace one of the seismically deficient bridges listed on the Department of Transportation's list of structurally deficient bridges. The 2.2 mile long SR-47 Expressway project will enhance the efficient and secure movement of international trade at the nation's largest port complex, as well as reduce congestion, improve air quality and public safety. The project will provide an alternate route that will by-pass three traffic signalized intersections and five at-grade rail crossings. The SR-47 Expressway will be an attractive alternative to the I-710 and I-110 Freeways and adjoining Terminal Island bridges for truck access to local warehouse districts and rail loading facilities thus reducing congestion and improving traffic flows on the freeways. It is my understanding Caltrans will contribute $332,000,000 to the project. In addition, preliminary engineering and environmental evaluation work at a cost of approximately $13 million has been funded by available ACTA revenue bonds and other state sources. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Bill Number: HR 1105, the Consolidated Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 2009

Name of Project: Bluff Top Park

Account: FHWA, Transportation and Community Systems Preservation Program

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: City of Huntington Beach, CA

Address of Requesting Entity: 2000 Main Street, Huntington Beach, CA 92648

Description of Request: I received $95,000 for the city of Huntington Beach's Bluff Top Park project. Bluff Top Park bike and pedestrian trails, park facilities and access roads are key elements adding to the economic viability of the beach as a tourist attraction. If the bluff area is left in its present condition, access to and enjoyment of the beach in that area will be limited. This limitation places serious constraints on the beach facilities as an economic resource to the City, region and State. The Bluff Top Park and the adjacent bike trails are regional coastal facilities used by over 850,000 visitors per year. Approximately 11 million State, National and International visitors come to Huntington Beach annually. Tourism is a major industry in Orange County and the State of California. The City's coastline is not just an extraordinary natural resource; it also represents an economic resource for the City, the State, and the Nation that cannot be neglected. To date, the City has contributed $4.5 million for improvements to the area. The City has also received two grants totaling $858,000 for the project. Funds will be used for technical assistance to provide plans, specifications and estimates for the design of the project. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Bill Number: HR 1105, the Consolidate Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 2009.

Name of Project: California Coastal Sediment Master Plan

Account: Corps of Engineers, General Investigations

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: County of Los Angeles, Beaches & Harbor Department

Address of Requesting Entity: 13837 Fiji Way, Marina del Rey, CA 90292

Description of Request: I received $822,000 for the County of Los Angeles' California Coastal Sediment Master Plan project. The California Coastal Sediment Master Plan (CCSMP) is a collaborative effort between the Corps of Engineers and a number of State/local agencies to survey the entire California Coastline to develop regional approaches to managing resources and strategies to replenish the coastline with sediment, including the Los Angeles County coastline. Over the years, human development has severely restricted the flow of sediment to the coastline (such as through sediment build up behind dams or through sediment being trapped underneath rivers/creeks that become paved flood control channels). The CCSMP when complete will provide critical assistance for properly managing and protecting California's coastal resources through strategies that lead to informed decisions and planning. The Corps will continue in FY 09 its intensive data collection effort through local public scoping meetings, along with ongoing development of GIS applications to manage the voluminous data and GIS-based sediment models in collaboration with local research universities. Some of the final products of this effort will also include an internal mapping server (IMS) webpage and development of regional sediment management plans. This plan is critical to ensure proper management, replenishment, and protection of California's coastal sediment resources through informed decisions and planning. Since the California Coastline holds important environmental, economic, cultural, and recreation benefits for the nation, halting the harmful effects of human development (both coastal and inland) is a significant national purpose. The primary non-federal sponsor for the study is the California Department of Boating and Waterways. This Department has provided all of the matching study support in the form of in-kind services. Funding for the in-kind work has come from various California State resources. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Bill Number: HR 1105, the Consolidated Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 2009.

Name of Project: Clean Fuel Bus Purchase Account: FTA, Bus and Bus Facilities

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Long Beach Transit

Address of Requesting Entity: 1963 E. Anaheim Street, Long Beach, CA 90813

Description of Request: I received $950,000 for Long Beach Transit's Clean Fuel Bus Purchase project. The federal government defines a bus' useful life as twelve years and requires local transit operators to replace buses when they are determined to be at the end of their useful life. Long Beach Transit is working to replace their 40-foot diesel buses, which are at the end of their useful life as defined by FTA, with hybrid gasoline-electric buses. In addition, Long Beach Transit is located in the South Coast Air Quality Management District, which, unfortunately, ranks last in the state of California for air quality standards. This project will improve air quality, in a region that has the most need for improvement, by removing diesel buses from the road and replacing them with clean fuel buses. It is my understanding that funds will go towards the purchasing of new clean busses at a cost of $550,000 per bus. Other funds will come from the Transportation Development Act, Proposition 1B Bond, and local sales tax revenue to fund capital improvement projects. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Bill Number: HR 1105, the Consolidated Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 2009.

Name of Project: Orange County District Attorney DNA Expansion Project

Account: Department of Justice, COPS Law Enforcement Technology

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Orange County District Attorney

Address of Requesting Entity: 401 Civic Center Drive West, Santa Ana, CA 92701

Description of Request: I received $500,000 for the Orange County District Attorney's DNA expansion project. Currently, throughout the country, law enforcement DNA laboratories are backlogged and must focus on the most violent of crimes, such as homicides and rapes. Due to these backlogs, "volume crimes" such as burglaries, auto thefts, auto burglaries, robberies, etc. are either "not processed" or significantly delayed. It is not uncommon for a residential burglary case to take a year or more to get DNA results, if the case is processed at all. In the meantime, the burglar is out in the community committing crime after crime. It is well documented that those who commit burglaries, also commit other crimes. These crimes include, but are not limited to, rapes, homicides, robberies, gang violence, drug possession and sales, carjacking, auto theft, etc. The proposed project will enable the OCDA to significantly expand its DNA collection and processing efforts. Funds would provide for three DNA mobile collection vehicles that would travel to the five branch courts in Orange County to collect DNA on site from offenders and volunteers. Funds would also provide for related equipment, supplies and DNA processing. By catching criminals with the evidence they leave behind in volume crimes, the OCDA will be preventing a series of undetected or unsolved crimes in our communities. The Orange County District Attorney anticipates significant contributions from the county towards the establishment of the project, and when fully funded funds will be used for the following:

DNA mobile collection vehicles (3 @ $300,000/each)—$900,000

DNA equipment, supplies and analysis—$1,000,000

Includes DNA kits, DNA processing and local data base populating—$1,900,000

I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Bill Number: HR 1105, the Consolidated Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 2009.

Name of Project: Virtual Interactive Training Center

Account: Department of Justice, OJP Byrne Discretionary Grants—

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Golden West College

Address of Requesting Entity: 15744 Golden West Street, Huntington Beach, CA 92672

Description of Request: I received $500,000 for Golden West College's Virtual Interactive Training Center. Funds will be used to purchase a virtual training facility for regional law enforcement. In particular, the Virtual Interactive Combat Environment provides a system well suited to Orange County's needs. This system enables team-based tactics, techniques, and procedures training that closely reflect live training, but at a much lower cost to departments over time. The simulator offers a cost-effective approach by creating an engaging virtual training solution. The system immerses the trainee in a realistic 3-D environment, with the sense of immersion being enhanced both by the high-fidelity situational rendering and by the ease of navigating through the environment using simple controls mounted on the tether-free simulated weapons. Golden West College will be contributing $240,000 toward the project. Fully funded, funds will be used as follows:

For the system hardware, software and simulated weapons—$463,432

For the trailer classroom—$252,221

Truck with towing package—$66,623

Training of instructors on virtual training system—$58,513

Twelve training databases and scenarios—$109,211

I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Requesting Member: Congressman DANA ROHRBACHER (CA-46)

Bill Number: HR 1105, the Consolidated Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 2009.

Name of Project: Ground Water Replenishment System

Account: Bureau of Reclamation, Water and Related Resources—Title XVI

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Orange County Water District

Address of Requesting Entity: 18700 Ward Street, Fountain Valley, CA 92708

Description of Request: I received $558,000 for the Orange County Water District's Ground Water Replenishment System. The Groundwater Replenishment (GWR) System is a jointly funded project of the Orange County Water District (OCWD) and the Orange County Sanitation District. This historic joint project is the culmination of OCWD's 75 years of experience managing the groundwater basin under north and central Orange County that supplies water to 21 cities and water agencies, and OCSD's longtime mission to protect the environment by safely treating the wastewater of over 2.5 million residents. The GWR System takes 70 million gallons of treated sewer water per day from OCSD, and puts it through an advanced purification process at OCWD which is comprised of three major components: (1) Micro-filtration; (2) Reverse Osmosis; and (3) ultraviolet light and hydrogen peroxide treatment. Once purified to levels which exceed drinking water standards, the GWR System water is either pumped through a pipeline to percolation ponds, where it naturally filters into the aquifer and blends with the groundwater, or is injected into the seawater intrusion barrier along the coast. While the groundwater basin currently provides approximately 70 percent of all water used within north and central Orange County, the GWR System will produce enough new water for over half-a-million residents, further lessening Orange County's dependence on imported waters from the Delta and the Colorado River. The GWR System is an effective response to meeting the federal mandate to decrease California's dependency on imported waters from the Colorado River, by creating a "new" source of water to serve an additional 560,000 residents a year in northern and central Orange County. The current method of moving water through the Delta to the pumps of the California State Water Project and Central Valley Projects is in jeopardy due to recent environmental rulings. The GWR System diminishes the region's reliance on uncertain imported water supplies. In addition to creating a reliable water source, the project creates new wastewater treatment capacity, reducing the amount of outfall during storms to the Pacific Ocean, preserving the country's vital coast, and provides all these benefits with fewer gas emissions than when importing water from the California State Water Project. Funds will be used for the Ground Water Replenishment Process Control System. It is my understanding that the following institutions plan to contribute to the project in the given amounts, State of California Department of Water Resources and Proposition 13 Grants, 2002 and 2000, $67,000,000 was funded. California State Water Resources Control Board, 2001, $5,000,000 was funded. U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, 2000, $500,000 was funded. Orange County Water District's contribution is $196,750,000 (40.5% of the total project cost) Orange County Sanitation District's contribution is $196,750,000 (40.5% of the total project cost). I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

The project is designed to build the infrastructure for two clinic sites in the 46th Congressional District. The clinics will enhance quality of care through the installation of electronic health records, video conference, and advanced patient management systems. These installations will promote patient safety and higher quality services from more efficient clinic operations. Project HER in OC fulfills the federal mandate on Uniform Health Information Technology which requires all healthcare providers receiving federal funds to adopt quality measurement tools and uniform information technology standards for measuring and reporting treatment outcomes, registering patients, reporting lab results, writing prescriptions and providing secure electronic communications between patient and doctors. Funds will be used to cover the purchase and installation of video conferencing, advanced patient management, and electronic health records systems at two clinics in the 46th district of California. AltaMed has provided a total of $1,033,000 to the project. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Description of Request: I received $380,000 for Orange County Transit Authority's I-405 widening project. OCTA has successfully completed a major investment study (MIS) for the Interstate 405 (I-405) Freeway. Funding is requested to support capacity improvements in each direction of the facility, adding up to two lanes from Euclid Street in Fountain Valley to Interstate 605 (I-605) near the Orange County/Los Angeles County border. Prior federal funding has fully supported the environmental phase of this project, which is currently being initiated by OCTA. This request is to secure the necessary funding for the next phase, which is the final design of the project. The project is considered for other funding sources including State Transportation Improvement Program (STIP) and Measure M (local sales tax). I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Bill Number: HR 1105, the Consolidated Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 2009.

Name of Project: Long Beach Desalination Project

Account: Bureau of Reclamation, Water and Related Resources—Title XVI

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Long Beach, CA Board of Water Commissioners

Description of Request: I received $1,057,000 for the Long Beach Water Commissioners' Long Beach Desalination Project.

Long Beach desalination represents the federal government's national interest in making desalination of seawater a viable, cost-effective and environmentally responsive option for supply reliability along the coast of California. Seawater desalination will not be seen by The Congress, the California State Legislature, regulatory agencies, private sector interests or the public as a viable, cost effective and environmentally responsive option for municipal water supply reliability in the United States until advances are made and existing processes optimized in on-going research and development, funded through programs like the Long Beach Desalination Project. The project is a constructed, large-scale, fully operational seawater desalination research and development facility located in urban/coastal Southern California. The research conducted at this facility is the most important and advanced, large-scale analysis being conducted anywhere in the nation at this time, to include facility design and construction, permitting, operations, water quality, distribution system integration and alternative intake and outfall systems. If fully funded, funds will be used in the following manner:

$600,000—UV & C12 Research
$1,000,000—Post Treatment Corrosives Testing

$1,050,000—Under Ocean Floor Intake Demonstration System Construction

It is my understanding the following amounts will be contributed to the total cost of the project.

State of California, Department of Water Resources, Proposition 50—$3,000,000; Long Beach Water—$4,000,000

I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Name of Project: Long Beach Water Reuse Project

Account: Bureau of Reclamation, Water and Related Resources—Title XVI

Description of Request: I received $634,000 for the Long Beach Board of Water Commissioners' Long Beach Water Reuse Project. Funds would go to construction of Phase 2 of a 4 phased reclaimed water expansion project moving use of reclaimed water from 4,585a/f to 16,677 a/f per year; extending reclaimed water service to the Alamitos Seawater Barrier and to two of the largest power generation plants in Southern California. Dependable water supplies for Southern California are becoming more difficult to develop and maintain. Continued reliability of traditional imported water sources such as the Colorado River and northern California is unclear. These sources cannot provide urban water supply agencies the certainty they must have in order to maintain a clean, reliable and affordable supply of water for its customers. Continued population growth within the Colorado River Basin is reducing the amount of water that has historically been available to populated areas like southern California. The necessity for southwestern regions in the United States to develop new sources and to fully utilize existing sources, and conservation, is very evident. This includes fully developing and expanding use of reclaimed water supply systems. Under a funding agreement signed in 2000, the Bureau of Reclamation will fund up to 25 percent (with a cap of $20,000,000) of the Long Beach Water Reuse Expansion Project's total cost of $35,200,000. To date, not including this request, the Long Beach Water Department has received a total of $4,000,000 under this funding agreement, for its reclaimed water system expansion. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Name of Project: Santa Ana River Mainstem Project

Account: Corps of Engineers, Construction
Legal Name of Requesting Entity: County of Orange, CA

Address of Requesting Entity: 300 N. Flower St., Santa Ana, CA 92703

Description of Request: I received $14,000,000 for the Orange County Santa Ana River Mainstem Project. The Santa Ana River Mainstem Project including Prado Dam (Project) was authorized under the Water Resources Development Act (WRDA) of 1986, and Section 309 of WRDA, 1996. The Project involves construction, acquisition of property rights, relocations, environmental mitigation and enhancement in Orange, Riverside, and San Bernardino counties. The flood control districts of these counties are the Local Sponsors who are responsible, with the Department of the Army, for implementing the Project. The Corps considered the Santa Ana River as the worst flood threat west of the Mississippi River. In 1980's, the Corps estimated that 3 million people and 110,000 acres would be impacted, with potential loss of 3,000 lives and $15 billion in economic losses (1987-8 price level.) Estimated impacts and loss (without the Project being constructed) would be much greater with current population growth and value of land and structures. In addition to protecting a large, highly populated and rapidly growing area of Southern California, the Project has and will improve protection of major transportation corridors. The Local Sponsors and State of California Flood Subvention Fund will provide other matching funds as follows. Non-Federal Total Contribution: Per Corps 2/2007 Report: Local Sponsor Share $599,000,000 (33.9%). If State reimburses 70% of Local Sponsor cost, then State contribution would be $419,300,000 (23.8%) and Local Sponsors net contribution would be $179,700,000 (10.1%) of Total Project Cost. Non-Federal Contribution in 2009:OCFCD Est. Contribution=$75,000,000 (4.2%). I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Address of Requesting Entity: 2000 Main Street, Huntington Beach, CA 92648

Description of Request: I received $142,500 for the city of Huntington Beach's Senior Center project. The City of Huntington Beach's existing senior center is located at 17th Street and Palm Avenue. Due to the City's expanding senior population, the current facility is overcrowded and too small to meet the needs of the growing population. To this end, a larger facility is needed to address the future growth of the senior population in Huntington Beach. The City plans to build the facility to meet Leadership in Energy Efficiency Design (LEED) with environmentally "Green" building material, furnishings and equipment. Funds will be used for the preparation of plans and specifications needed to create environmentally "Green" or LEED certified elements to the senior center. $80,000 has been received from a private donation which will be used for the construction phase of the project or to help furnish the completed building. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Account: Natural Resources Conservation Services, Conservation Operations

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Municipal Water District of Orange County

Address of Requesting Entity: 18700 Ward Street, PO Box 20895, Fountain Valley, CA. 92728

Description of Request: I received $134,000 for the Municipal Water District of Orange County's Smart Timer Irrigation Controllers system. "Smart" Irrigation Controller Technology assists customers in delivering the appropriate amount of water to landscapes based on soil, slope, type of landscape and changing weather conditions. Funding will be used to expand an existing $2.2 million program launched in 2004 (FY05) to distribute an additional 5,500 Smart Irrigation Controllers by the end of 2011 to the highest water using residential and commercial properties in the County. Overall program funding goes towards providing a rebate administrator to market the program in conjunction with MWDOC staff time and for hire of the Mission Resource Conservation District to assist with the program implementation and installation verification. Some of the funding may go towards purchasing the irrigation timers to allow acceleration of the installation program. The expected costs for expanding the program by about 1800 controllers over the next year would cost:

Rebate Administrator costs: $1,350,000

Resource Conservation Districts $240,000

Printing mailing: $50,000

Total: $1,640,000

The Municipal Water District of Orange County will contribute $900,000 to the project. Other local agencies will contribute $180,000, and site owners and participants $60,000. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Description of Request: I received $546,000 for Orange County's Surfside, Sunset, and Newport Beach program. The project extends along the Orange County coast 17 miles from San Gabriel River mouth down coast to Newport Bay Harbor entrance. Eleven stages of construction have been completed including groins and beach fill. Periodic beach nourishment with no time limit on Federal aid was authorized by Public Law 87-874, as recommended by House document 602. The feeder beach at Surfside-Sunset receives approximately 1.8 million cubic yards of sand every 5 years. This is an on-going project by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to mitigate damage to Orange County coastline caused by construction of Federal navigation and flood control works in Long Beach and Anaheim Bay. Severe shoreline erosion resulted from storms in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1995 and 1998. Other funding sources towards the total cost of the project are anticipated as follows:

State of California Department of Boating and Waterways 24.5%

City of Newport Beach 2%

City of Huntington Beach 1%

Surfside Colony 0.5%

County of Orange 5%

Address of Requesting Entity: 300 N. Flower St., Santa Ana, CA 92703

Description of Request: I received $860,000 for Orange County's Westminster (East Garden Grove) Watershed project. Flood damages along the East Garden Grove-Wintersburg Channel affect residential, commercial, and industrial development located in an 81 square mile watershed, impacting eleven cities in Orange County. Over 20,000 property owners are currently required to participate in the National Flood Insurance Program, while aging levees jeopardize thousands of additional property owners. The study will investigate innovative methods to provide flood protection in combination with improved ecosystem functioning and water quality. Over 20,000 property owners are currently mandated by the Federal government to pay flood insurance because of inadequate flood protection in this watershed. Taxpayer funds are used to rebuild private property and public infrastructure every year that flood damages occur. This comprehensive study is developing innovative, sustainable solutions to flooding, water quality, and environmental problems in this watershed. Those solutions will provide more cost-effective approaches than currently exist, and contribute to the National Economic Development as well as National Ecosystem Restoration Plan. It is the mission of the Army Corps of Engineers (Corps) to provide flood protection, navigation, and ecosystem restoration in meeting these criteria. It is my understanding the County of Orange, CA will contribute $1,740,000 to the project. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Account: Natural Resources Conservation Service, Conservation Operations

Amount: $288,000

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Iowa Soybean Association

Address of Requesting Entity: 4554 114th St., Urbandale, IA 50322

Description of Request: Iowa Soybean Association's Certified Environmental Management Systems for Agriculture (CEMSA) program's overarching goal is to develop and disseminate a means for farmers to assess and improve their environmental performance, while improving agronomic and economic performance, using an adaptive management tool based on ISO 14001 and NRCS's 9-step planning process. This adaptive management system employs science-based applied evaluation tools to give each farmer baseline data, in the first year, then performance data in subsequent years giving them real feedback from their own operation on which to make management decisions regarding nutrients, soil, pests, energy uses and sources, wildlife habitat, greenhouse gas emissions (GHGE) and other atmospheric resources he or she may prioritize. ISA staff train and oversee contracted Certified Crop Advisors who provide technical assistance to producers in developing and maintaining their CEMSA plan. Cost and profit data is also plugged into the plan to guide the producer in determining the economic sustainability of environmental performance.

The public now demands from crop producers both increased production of food, fiber, fuel, and other biobased product feedstocks and increased, documented environmental performance to conserve soils, sequester carbon, improve water quality, reduce greenhouse gas emissions, improve energy efficiency and increase wildlife habitat. As independent business persons, farmers in the Upper Mississippi River (UMR) Basin and across the country need management systems to help them incorporate the best tools of science and business to measure and improve both agronomic and environmental performance while sustaining profitability. This program has developed and piloted the basic management system and the technical assistance model producers in Iowa, the UMR Basin, and other agricultural regions need to meet these 21st Century demands. Expanding the scale of CEMSA in FY09, integrating individual planning with watershed planning, linking performance reporting to NRCS's system, and establishing recognized certification have significant implications in transferability of CEMSA throughout the UMR Basin and nationally. CEMSA is one of the ISA programs recognized by the National Academy of Sciences National Research Council's study on the Mississippi River Water Quality and the Clean Water Act as exemplary of the performance-based, public-private partnership projects that should be expanded throughout the UMR Basin.

Requesting Member: Congressman STEVE KING

Address of Requesting Entity: 4554 114th Street, Urbandale, IA 50322

Description of Request: The Iowa Soybean Association's Watershed Management and Demonstration Program is a continuing project that links public and private resources and expertise to provide technical assistance to individual farmers, groups of farmers, and other stakeholders in Iowa watersheds for the purpose of improving agriculture's environmental performance and watershed health.

The project supports expert staff to assist watershed organizations and groups of farmers in developing and maintaining adaptive management plans and in measuring and reporting performance in optimizing fertilizer use efficiency, remediating agricultural pollutants, decreasing soil erosion, building soil carbon, improving on-farm energy efficiency, reducing greenhouse gas emissions, enhancing wildlife habitat, and maintaining or increasing yield and profitability.

Private-public partnerships among agencies, private industry, producers, environmental groups, all levels of government, water utilities, and the university are fundamental to the design of this project, and those functioning partnerships to achieve the above project objectives are a measure of the project's success. This project also enables farmers to engage in watershed leadership and planning, employing their expertise and motivating more effective environmental management practices.

Amount: $500,000

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Sioux City Police Department

Address of Requesting Entity: 601 Douglas St., Sioux City, IA 51101

Description of Request: National Meth Training Center—An informal poll of Police Chiefs and Sheriffs in the region conducted by the Sioux City Police Department, revealed that most rural communities had received little or no training in drug identification, investigative methods, intelligence gathering, search warrant preparation and execution or in the hazards of clandestine methamphetamine laboratories prior to the inception of the training center. The Sioux City Police Department National Training Center maintains a vision of providing the most current and relevant training in the area of narcotics law enforcement. The training center's mission is to support the overall effort to control and reduce methamphetamine production, trafficking and distribution on the local, regional and national level. The Sioux City Police Department is providing the leadership in developing training now and for the future. To that end the NTC strives to:

Provide the most current and relevant training in all areas of narcotics law enforcement provided by the most highly skilled instructors available. Provide skills based training through the use of simulation and scenario based practicals. Provide a central clearinghouse for the organization, coordination, research and curriculum development targeted towards the continued education of those in the law enforcement profession. Provide current situational awareness regarding the connections between narcotics trafficking and terrorist activities.

The NTC is in a unique position at this time to assist law enforcement professionals across the nation in their fight against illegal drugs. Officers and administrators from 40 states have attended training at our facility. Instructors and students who have attended training in Sioux City have also spread the word about the unique training opportunities available at the NTC. Students from as far away as Alaska, California, New York and Florida have attended training at the NTC. Officers have come from as far away as Oklahoma using their own vacation time just to attend the training provided by the training center because that same training would otherwise be unavailable to them.

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Heartland Family Services, Inc.

Address of Requesting Entity: 515 East Broadway, Council Bluffs, IA 51503

Description of Request: Heartland Family Services Residential Methamphetamine Treatment in Southwest Iowa—The need for the Southwest Iowa Methamphetamine Treatment Program centers around the epidemic of methamphetamine use. One in three child protective investigations in the Council Bluffs area involves this drug. Some babies are born with methamphetamine in their system, and children are exposed to use of the drug in their home. Some children live in homes where methamphetamine is being manufactured.

This project will be a collaborative effort between Heartland Family Services, the Iowa Department of Human Services, the courts, and other social service agencies. It is a clinically managed low-intensity residential service for substance abuse patients, using Heartland Family Service's established residential treatment and counseling facilities. The program offers women an interim residential treatment service, and at the same time allows them to continue parenting their children. Treatment is directed toward applying recovery skills, preventing relapse, promoting personal responsibility and reintegrating the patient into work, education and family life. Services include individual, group and family therapy.

This level of care is a missing piece in the substance abuse treatment continuum of care in Southwest Iowa. Patients who complete residential programming ordinarily go directly home and receive outpatient treatment. To prevent relapse, many of these patients would benefit from a monitored interim treatment setting. Each patient has clinical oversight by a professional counselor who assesses the psychosocial history of a substance abuser to determine the most appropriate treatment plan.

Description of Request: Iowa Western Nursing Center of Excellence—Iowa Western Community College in Council Bluffs will use these funds to increase the number of highly skilled nurses in the state of Iowa. Since 2003, 100% of Iowa Western Community College's graduates have passed the state nursing certification test on the first attempt, which is better than many of the state's, as well as the region's, four-year institutions. Because Iowa Western Community College currently graduates many of the state's top dental assistants, dental hygienists, practical nurses, registered nurses, surgical technologists, medical assistants and emergency medical technicians, enrollment could be greatly increased to meet demand if the college had the necessary equipment and expanded faculties. Therefore, Iowa Western Community College proposes a new Iowa Western Nursing Center of Excellence, with multiple laboratories and high-tech equipment on which to train thousands of future nurses within the next decade. The college, community and private donors have recently committed at least $10,000,000 to the Center's construction. The new laboratories and equipment will strongly enhance substantial job creation within Iowa, improve access to health care for Iowans and expand the creation of a scientifically qualified workforce in the medical and health services arena. By greatly enhancing the teaching environment, as well as the physical learning space and equipment, Iowa Western Community College will alleviate the region's nurse shortage and double the number of nurses it trains annually by 2012.

HON. MARY FALLIN

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Ms. FALLIN. Madam Speaker, pursuant to the House Republican standards on federally funded projects, I, Congresswoman MARY FALLIN, am submitting the following information for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD regarding federally funded projects I received as part of H.R. 1105—Omnibus Appropriations Act, 2009.

Under Division B—Commerce, Justice, Science, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2009 I, Congresswoman MARY FALLIN, requested and received through the Department of Justice under its OJP—Byrne Discretionary Account the amount of $150,000 for the University of Central Oklahoma located in Edmond, Oklahoma. The requesting entity for this funding was the University of Central Oklahoma located at 100 North University Drive, Edmond, OK 73034. The University of Central Oklahoma combined with the new $35 million Oklahoma State Bureau of Investigation Forensic Institution and has established a major forensic education/laboratory program serving the entire southwest. The Program has been expanded to 48 graduates a year. This funding will be used to provide laboratory infrastructure and equipment to significantly expand the services available to the training programs and to state and local law enforcement officers.

Under Division B—Commerce, Justice, Science, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2009 I, Congresswoman MARY FALLIN, requested and received through the Department of Justice under its COPS Law Enforcement Technology Account the amount of $200,000 for the Oklahoma Department of Safety located in Oklahoma City, OK. The requesting entity for this funding was the Oklahoma Bureau of Investigations located at 6600 N. Harvey, Oklahoma City, OK 73116. Provide $200,000 to replace the state's aging communication system and to provide comprehensive radio and data communications capabilities for all emergency response agency units in Oklahoma. Out of this $200,000, the amount of $150,000 [75% of the total] will be used for the replacement of a 800 MHz base station and associated repeater equipment at a major transmission site in Chickasha, OK which is ten years old and is now frequently failing, creating a safety issue for the public safety personnel that depend on that location. Additionally, the amount of $50,000 [25% of the total] will be used to replace and upgrade a dispatcher console in Muskogee, OK in order that it can handle low band and 800 MHz radio frequencies. The current communications capabilities of the Oklahoma Highway Patrol and other law enforcement agencies are inadequate, unsafe, and antiquated. Deployment of this communications system will patch geographical gaps in the state, link all the types of the first responders and support personnel and enable Oklahoma state and local public safety agencies to quickly transmit critical information on potential threats. A statewide 800-megahertz communications system was approved in 1982 but has never been completed due to budget constraints.

Under Division B—Commerce, Justice, Science, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2009 I, Congresswoman MARY FALLIN, requested and received through the Department of Justice under its COPS Law Enforcement Technology Account the amount of $300,000 for the Oklahoma State Bureau of Investigations located in Oklahoma City, OK. The requesting entity for this funding was the Oklahoma Bureau of Investigations located at 6600 N. Harvey, Oklahoma City, OK 73116. The Oklahoma Mobile Analysis Center is a self-contained vehicle equipped with secure computer hardware/software and communication-networking systems that will allow trained criminal analysts to receive, analyze, and disseminate raw intelligence data necessary to state and national homeland security efforts. Information generated by the MAC unit will be turned into actionable knowledge that supports the ability to detect, investigate, prevent, and respond to criminal and terrorist activity.

Under Division C—Energy and Water Development and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2009, I, Congresswoman MARY FALLIN, requested and received through the Corps of Engineers under its Investigations Account the amount of $311,000 for the Southeast Oklahoma Water Resource Study. The requesting entity for this funding was the Oklahoma Water Resources Board located at 3800 N. Classen Blvd., OKC, OK 73118. The output of this multi-year study will be a Southeast Oklahoma Watershed Management Plan that identifies solutions to water resources problems with the study area, including a systems approach to collaboratively develop pertinent existing, forecasted and strategic information for the Oklahoma Comprehensive Water Plan.

Under Division C—Energy and Water Development and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2009, I, Congresswoman MARY FALLIN, requested and received through the Corps of Engineers under its Investigations Account the amount of $191,000 for the Washita River Basin. The requesting entity for this funding was the Oklahoma Water Resources Board located at 3800 N. Classen Blvd., OKC, OK 73118. The output of this multi-year study will be a Washita River Watershed Management Plan that identifies solutions to water resource problems within the study area, including a systems approach to collaboratively develop pertinent existing, forecasted and strategic information for the Oklahoma Comprehensive Water Plan. The project covers the Washita River Watershed and adjacent counties in southwest Oklahoma.—

Under Division C—Energy and Water Development and Related Agencies Appropriations

Act, 2009, I, Congresswoman MARY FALLIN, requested and received through the Corps of Engineers under its Investigations—PAS Account the amount of $100,000 for the PAS: Oklahoma Comprehensive Water Plan. The requesting entity for this funding was the Oklahoma Water Resources Board located at 3800 N. Classen Blvd., OKC, OK 73118. This Multi-year study to provide technical assistance to the state of Oklahoma in updating the Oklahoma Comprehensive Water Plan. The OWRB envisions that, combined with federal cost-shared funds, the OWRB could work with local water suppliers in evaluating their system conditions, long-term needs, and develop a strategy to meet their needs over a 50-year time horizon. The plan would also address the long-term needs of other water use sectors.

Under Division C—Energy and Water Development and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2009, I, Congresswoman MARY FALLIN, requested and received through the Bureau of Reclamation under its Water and Related Sources Account the amount of $65,000 for the Oklahoma Investigations Program, Oklahoma Comprehensive Water Plan. The requesting entity for this funding was the Oklahoma Water Resources Board located at 3800 N. Classen Blvd., OKC, OK 73118. This project provides technical assistance and funds to assist the State of Oklahoma in updating the Oklahoma State Comprehensive Water Plan. FY2009 funds are being requested to complete modernization of the OWRB database management system, migration of existing data and appropriate training.

Under Division F—Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2009, I, Congresswoman MARY FALLIN requested and received through the Department of Health and Human Services under its Health Resources and Services—Health Facilities and Services Account the amount of $333,000 for Oklahoma Medical Research Foundation located at 825 N.E. 13th Street Oklahoma City, Oklahoma 73104. These funds will be used for a mass spectrometer. Mass Spectrometry is a highly effective type of advanced technical analysis and has become a critical technique in biomedical research. In a field such as cardiovascular disease research, mass spectrometry is giving scientists new abilities ranging from experiments attempting to understand fundamental processes. Mass spectrometers have fundamentally changed research and are now considered a key tool for research organizations. In the entire State of Oklahoma there is no such instrument.

Under Division F—Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2009, I, Congresswoman MARY FALLIN requested and received through the Department of Health and Human Services Account under its Health Resources and Services—Health Facilities and Services the amount of $285,000 for Oklahoma State University Center for Health Sciences located at 1111 West 17th, Tulsa, OK 74101. and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2009, I, Congresswoman MARY FALLIN requested and received through the Department of Health and Human Services under its Health Resources and Services—Health Facilities and Services Account the amount of $333,000 for Oklahoma State University Center for Health Sciences located at 1111 West 17th, Tulsa, OK 74101. These funds will be used for the purchase of equipment.

Under Division F—Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2009, I, Congresswoman MARY FALLIN requested and received through the Institute of Museum and Library Services under its Museums and Libraries Account the amount of $285,000 for the Native American Cultural and Educational Authority located in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma. The requesting entity for this funding was the City of Oklahoma City located at 200 North Walker Street, Oklahoma City, OK 73102. Oklahoma has a unique story and a history that differentiates us from any other state in the nation. Nowhere else in the United States can a visitor hear first-hand accounts from 39 different American Indian Tribal Nations regarding their journey from ancestral homelands, or discover how Native peoples have contributed and woven their identities into the fabric of contemporary Oklahoma. The American Indian Cultural Center will be a “living cultural space” featuring modern-day expressions of 39 Tribal Nations. It will provide visitors a rare opportunity to be immersed in traditional celebrations, contemporary events, and activities both inside the Cultural Center and across a 300-acre Cultural Park. These funds will be used to complete the education and cultural exhibits construction within the cultural center.

Under Division I—Transportation, Housing and Urban Development, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2009, I, Congresswoman MARY FALLIN requested and received through the Buses and Facilities Account the amount of $712,000 for the Central Oklahoma Transportation and Parking Authority located at 300 S.W. 7th St., Oklahoma City, Oklahoma 73109. HON. PETE SESSIONS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. SESSIONS. Madam Speaker, pursuant to the Republican Leadership standards on earmarks, I am submitting the following information for publication regarding earmarks I received as part of H.R. 1105 FY 2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act.

Requesting Member: Congressman PETE SESSIONS

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Department of Justice, OJP Byrne Discretionary Grants

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Phoenix House

Address of Requesting Entity: 2345 Regan Street, Dallas, Texas, 75219

Description of Request: I have received an earmark of $500,000 to expand the service delivery system for the increasing number of Dallas area adolescents who are seeking drug treatment. Dallas has been identified by the Office of National Drug Control Policy (ONDCP) as one of the communities hit hardest by the problem of drug abuse among our nation's youth, and the ONDCP has recognized Dallas as a High Intensity Drug Trafficking Area. The impact of alcohol and drug abuse has been well documented in terms of financial costs to federal, state, and local governments. North Texas, especially Dallas, is experiencing an epidemic of the use of ‘cheese,’ a mixture of black tar heroin and over-the-counter drugs a very dangerous and highly addictive combination.

Requesting Member: Congressman PETE SESSIONS

Account: Department of Justice, COPS Law Enforcement Technology

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Dallas County Sheriff's Department

Address of Requesting Entity: 133 North Industrial Blvd., Dallas, Texas 75207

Description of Request: I have received an earmark of $100,000 to update the AFIS system for the Dallas County Sheriff's Department. The Dallas County Sheriff's Department books approximately 400 people every 24 hours. The current system is slow and is susceptible to error and misidentifications. A biometric “2-fingerlook-up system” is needed in order to process arrestees accurately and effectively. Dallas County Sheriff's Department needs to update its AFIS system, AFIX Tracker. These upgrades will provide each of the surrounding agencies the ability to search the Dallas County database. Dallas County will also have the ability to search databases maintained in the surrounding counties, including Parker County, Collin County and Denton County. The outcome of this regional database approach will be to dramatically increase the efficiency and hit rate of the Dallas County Sheriff's Department's AFIX Tracker AFIS system.

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Corps of Engineers, Construction

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: City of Dallas

Address of Requesting Entity: 1500 Manila 4EN, Dallas, Texas 75201

Description of Request: I have received an earmark of $13,000,000 for the Dallas Floodway Extension (DFE). This request is for continuation construction funding of the Dallas Floodway Extension (DFE). It is a joint effort between the City of Dallas and the Army Corps of Engineers consisting of a “chain of wetlands” and a system of protective levees. The flood control improvements will reduce flooding for 12,500 structures in the Central Business District and area neighborhoods permitting balanced growth. The DFE builds on prior flood protection efforts undertaken by the City to protect low-income neighborhoods and the primary wastewater treatment plant that serves 75% of Dallas's needs. The proposed improvements will increase the level of protection of the Dallas Floodway levee system to the Standard Project Flood or 800-year event. Features will include 5.5 miles of levee construction, 170 acres of wetlands development and 1,179 acres of land preservation. The main objective of this project is to provide improved flood protection for the full length of the Trinity River Corridor in Dallas in a way that supports the achievement of environmental, recreational, mobility and economic development goals.

The Advanced Parallel Processing Center (APPC) is a “super computer” that will allow significant contribution in computationally intensive areas of research at SMU and other north Texas academic institutions. This center will allow the North Texas university community to access state of the art parallel computing resources. SMU is participating in the ATLAS experiment at the CERN Large Hadron Collider. The APPC will allow SMU to analyze the data collected from ATLAS. APPC will benefit the study of high energy physics, statistical modeling of functional MRI data collected from veterans suffering from Gulf War Syndrome, problems in cancer chemotherapy, logistics for the banking industry, network design for the telecommunications industry, and applications of energy conservation and nanotechnology. The United States must continue to lead the world in science research in order to remain globally competitive and to attract the best and the brightest scholars.

MRS. IRENE DAY-COMER

HON. PETER J. VISCLOSKY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Madam Speaker, it is my distinct honor to take this time to remember one of Northwest Indiana's most talented and most admired citizens, Irene Day-Comer. An extraordinary soloist, Irene's serene vocals touched the hearts and lifted the spirits of countless residents of Northwest Indiana and beyond, and through her remarkable gift, she served her community in a way that very few people can. Unfortunately, Mrs. Day-Comer passed away on Monday, February 2, 2009, at the age of 86, but her music will forever remain in the hearts and spirits of those fortunate enough to have heard her sing.

Born in the rural farming community of Marks, Mississippi, Irene's family, like many African American families at the time, fled the South in search of better opportunities in more industrialized areas of the country. After arriving in Northwest Indiana, Irene's family made their home in East Chicago, Indiana. Born into a family of deep spiritual faith and religious conviction, it was at Antioch Baptist Church in East Chicago where Mrs. Day-Comer's extraordinary gift and love for sacred music would emerge. At Antioch, she was a member of the Junior Red Circle and Baptist Training Circle and was active in various choirs and ensembles. During her younger years, Irene attended Columbus Elementary School and Washington High School, where she was a member of the highly esteemed Paul Robeson Glee Club. Encouraged by her mentor and pastor, the late Dr. Vincent McCutcheon, Mrs. Day-Comer went on to study at the Moody Bible Institute and the American Baptist Theological Seminary Extension in Chicago.

By the age of eight years old, Irene's passion for music and unquestionable talent was already clear to those who heard her pristine voice. This passion would carry on to her adult life, where she would continue to serve her community through her songs of faith, hope, and inspiration. She gained acclaim from the likes of Oprah Winfrey, who heard her sing after speaking at Antioch in 1981. After this, Reverend McCutcheon and a group of local churches were able to raise enough funds for Irene and pianist, Marilyn Hairston, to record her historic debut album, Irene Day—He's Everywhere, in 1982. This outstanding compilation of sacred songs allowed even more people the joyous opportunity to hear her exceptional voice, and after being re-released in 2002 in the wake of the tragedy of September 11, an entirely new generation was introduced to her uplifting spirit.

A woman whose life and talent spread far beyond the borders of Northwest Indiana, Mrs. Day-Comer received many accolades for her artistry and her service to the community. In 1982, Irene was honored by the City of East Chicago for her contributions to the community, and July 8 was proclaimed Irene Day Day. In 1985, she was recipient of the prestigious Monroe-Master Dedication Commission Award bestowed by the African Methodist Episcopal Church for her efforts to aid and inspire others. Irene was also honored nationally in 1982 following the release of her album with commendations from the Congressional Black Caucus, the late Congressman Adam Benjamin, Jr., Senator Richard Lugar, and former Vice President Dan Quayle.

Madam Speaker, I respectfully ask that you and my other distinguished colleagues join me in honoring a great American artist and citizen, Mrs. Irene Day-Comer, for sharing her outstanding talents with the people of Indiana's First Congressional District and beyond. Irene Day-Comer's remarkable gift brought joy and hope to all who listened to her songs, and I ask that you join me in remembering her today.

HON. BOB INGLIS

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. INGLIS. Madam Speaker, pursuant to the Republican leadership standards on earmarks, I am submitting the following information regarding earmarks I received as part of HR 1105, Omnibus Appropriations Act, 2009.

Requesting Member: Congressman BOB INGLIS

Bill Number: HR 1105 FY2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act—Energy and Water—Department of Energy

Account: Biomass and Biorefinery Systems R&D

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Clemson University

Address of Requesting Entity: 209 Sikes Hall, Clemson, South Carolina 29634

Description of Request: The purpose of the request is to provide an earmark of $951,500 to the Clemson University Cellulosic Biofuel Plant project. Cellulosic ethanol comes from breaking down the lignin and hemicellulose shell in order to access plant sugars for fermentation into renewable fuel. It is estimated that cellulose conversion to ethanol can produce 800–1000 gallons of ethanol per acre (compared to 416/acre for corn). Capturing 20% of the state's gasoline fuel market through bio-ethanol would build a $1Bn industry. In order to accomplish that goal, South Carolina must have the capacity to produce 700M gallons of ethanol/year. Based on recent studies of the economic impact of corn ethanol plans in the Midwest, 700M gal/year of bio-ethanol capacity could lead to $1.5Bn in capital investments, create 10,000 new jobs, add $2Bn to the local economy and increase local and state taxes by $20M. Approximately $50,000 (5%) will go towards site utilities/grading; $680,000 (71%) will go towards building structure; and the remaining $228,000 (24%) will go towards process equipment, support utility systems and construction fees; with multiple funding sources in subsequent years completing the project.

Requesting Member: Congressman BOB INGLIS

Account: Science

The project links South Carolina to a nation-wide backbone of world-class university research, industry partners and cutting-edge technology entrepreneurs. CUCI will serve as a conduit for a virtual research campus that brings together cyber resources and strengths from each of South Carolina's research institutions, including Clemson University, the Medical University of South Carolina, and the University of South Carolina. Approximately $250,000 (18%) will go towards network connectivity; $200,000 (14%) will go towards network redundancy; $250,000 (18%) will go towards high performance computing; $250,000 (18%) will go towards data storage; $200,000 (14%) will go towards visualization resources and $250,000 (18%) for personnel management support, with multiple funding sources in subsequent years completing the project.

A TRIBUTE TO LEO V. STIMMLER

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. TOWNS. Madam Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Leo V. Stimmler, who after 34 years of service to the NYC Health and Hospitals Corporation has decided to retire.

A native of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Mr. Stimmler graduated from Fordham University's School of Social Work. Shortly thereafter he joined the New York City Health and Hospitals Corporation. Hired by Earl Deane, chief psychiatric social worker at the Kings County Hospital's Bedford-Stuyvesant Addiction Treatment Center, Mr. Stimmler began a long career working with those dealing with addiction. In 1976, Mr. Stimmler was promoted to social work supervisor and, eventually, the head of the social work department.

In 1985, Mr. Stimmler was hired by Wayne C. Wiltshire and Arthur Wright to administer the HHC drug and alcohol treatment program at a sister HHC facility, the Cumberland Diagnostic and Treatment Center. With Phil Garrett, CASAC, they wrote successful grant applications for adolescent treatment, homeless families, acupuncture, women services, parolees and homeless veterans. In 1988, some of the homeless patients complained to Mr. Stimmler that it was difficult attending treatment at Cumberland during the day to then return to the shelter at night, to a drill floor with 700 beds in an armory facility pervaded by drugs and alcohol. Mr. Stimmler asked Holly Argent-Tariq, Cumberland's senior administrator, to help him convince Frank Gonzalez, the director of the Atlantic Mens Shelter, to set aside a separate room for 10 patients living in the shelter who were simultaneously attending alcohol and drug treatment programs. Mr. Gonzalez agreed, on the condition that the shelter resident supply proof of enrollment in a treatment program and make a pledge of abstinence. On April 22, 1989, Sara Rimer's article in the New York Times described the history and success of the first drug free dorm in a city shelter.

Within six years the outpatient clinic census at Cumberland went from 12,000 annual outpatient visits to 48,000. According to the New York City Bureau of Health Statistics, between January 1, 1988 and December 31, 1991, the number of deaths from drug abuse in Fort Greene, Brooklyn dropped from 30 percent to 10 percent.

In 1982, in response to difficulties retaining addiction counselors due to the lack of a career ladder, Mr. Stimmler asked the HHC Office of Behavioral Health to add senior addiction counselor to the corporate plan of titles. After working on the project for more than ten years with Brenda Ballenger and the addiction counselors of Cumberland, Woodhull and Kings County Hospitals, a new assignment level for the addiction counselor position was created. On January 29, 1993, Rosa Maria

Gil, DSW, HHC Senior Vice President for Mental Health and Chemical Dependency Services, announced the creation of the titles of senior addiction counselor I and II.

In 1998 Mr. Stimmler was assigned responsibility for administering the Woodhull Chemical Dependency Program as well as Cumberland's.

Mr. Stimmler is married to Kathleen, whom he met 36 years ago at the Fordham School of Social Work; she is in charge of psychiatric social work at the Nassau University Medical Center. They have two children, Colin, who works for the City of New York's Department of Homeless Services as an Emergency Planner, and Chad, a data analyst, is employed by the Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center.

SAFE DRUG DISPOSAL ACT OF 2009

HON. JAY INSLEE

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. INSLEE. Madam Speaker, I am proud to announce the introduction of the Safe Drug Disposal Act of 2009. This important bill allows states the opportunity to continue their outstanding work to clean up our streets and waterways from unused pharmaceuticals, including both controlled and uncontrolled substances. It is my hope that Congress will give as much attention to this bill as it deserves.

In 1970, the Controlled Substances Act was enacted into law under title II of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970. This valuable act was designed to protect the American public from recreational use of controlled substances by creating a closed loop system, which restricts the movement of controlled substances to individuals designated to handle such substances. Unfortunately, as we learn more about the high risks of controlled substances on our streets and in our water ways, the Controlled Substances Act has inadvertently established a barrier between safe and unsafe disposal methods of unused or unwanted controlled substances. Without amending this law, controlled substance abuse on our streets and prescription drug pollution of our water ways will continue to rise.

In 2007, a study conducted by the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration of the Department of Health and Human Services found that, while cocaine and methamphetamine use among young adults dropped significantly, prescription drug abuse increased. Among young adults ages 18 to 25, the level of current nonmedical use of prescription pain relievers has risen 12 percent. Further, results of a separate study of seventh through twelfth grade students released on April 21, 2005 by the Partnership for a Drug-Free America indicated that teenagers are more likely to have abused a prescription pain medication to get high than they are to have experimented with a variety of illicit drugs including ecstasy, cocaine, crack, and LSD. During this study, one in five teenagers reported using the controlled substance Vicodin without a prescription; approximately ten percent reported using the controlled substance

OxyContin without a prescription; and ten percent reported having used prescription stimulants, Ritalin and/or Adderall, without a prescription.

One reason why pharmaceutical drug diversion has increased over the last few years is the availability of unused prescription drugs. Among teenagers surveyed in the April 21, 2005 study administered by the Partnership for a Drug-Free America, fifty percent indicated that prescription drugs are widely available, one-third indicated that prescription drugs were easy to purchase over the Internet, and sixty-three percent said they could easily obtain prescription opiates and painkillers from their own home. Family medicine cabinets all across America have turned into the drug dealers of today.

It is not irresponsibility that has driven the abundance of pharmaceuticals in households across America. Americans have their hands tied when they look to dispose of unused pharmaceuticals. The choice to either throw them in the trash or flush them down the toilet is environmentally unacceptable. Recent reports indicate traces of common medicines such as acetaminophen, hormones, blood pressure medications, codeine and antibiotics in very low concentrations in 80 percent of samples taken from 139 streams across 30 states. Researchers are continuously finding diluted concentrations of pharmaceutical residues harm fish, frogs and other aquatic species in the wild and impair the workings of human cells in laboratories.

Many Americans understand the need for appropriate disposal methods in their communities. Just last year, Local Hazardous Waste Management Program in King County, WA collected over 1,100 lbs of uncontrolled substances per month during their Safe Medicine Return Pilot program. It is programs like these that will provide a safe means of disposal to take prescription drugs off the streets and out of our water.

I am pleased to introduce the Safe Drug Disposal Act of 2009. It is my hope that Congress will consider this important piece legislation to keep our communities and waterways free from waste pharmaceuticals.

Additionally, the project will strengthen partnerships between local grassroots and faith-based groups working to combat crime and violence.

Bill Number: H.R. 1105, the Omnibus Appropriations Act, 2009—Division B: Commerce, Justice, Science, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, Account: OJP—Byrne Discretionary Grants, Title: Gang and Youth Violence Security Initiative, Legal Name of Requesting Entity: School District of the City of Allentown, Address of Requesting Entity: 31 South Penn Street, PO Box 328, Allentown, PA 18105, Description of Request: For the past three years the Allentown School District has seen an increase in the amount of critical incidents involving violent behavior. Recently, national gangs have penetrated the region and brought with them a more organized and better supported system to augment local gang activity. This has increased the number of adjudicated youth in the area, and has increased the severity and number of disciplinary issues in Allentown's schools. This initiative will enhance security training and equipment to provide for a safer Allentown School District. The additional security measures will help the district get a better handle on the activities occurring in and around its schools.

Bill Number: H.R. 1105, the Omnibus Appropriations Act, 2009—Division C: Energy and Water Development and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, Account: Corps of Engineers, Investigations—FPMS, Title: FPMS: Southeastern, PA, Legal Name of Requesting Entity: U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Philadelphia District (NAP), Address of Requesting Entity: 100 Penn Square East, Philadelphia, PA 19107, Description of Request: This funding will allow the Army Corps of Engineers to provide local communities planning tools that could help reduce damages from future flooding in southeastern Pennsylvania. This technology uses a base liquid mixture and an additive package. The base mixture is designed to have a freezing point below -40°C , thermo-physical properties similar to the current automotive antifreeze, and possesses no flash point. The additive package in the coolant has been designed to maintain very low electrical conductivity, a critical requirement for cooling fuel cells. No other coolant available today can do this job by itself.

Since the establishment of the Peace Corps by President John F. Kennedy in 1961, more than 195,000 U.S. Citizens have served their country in the cause of peace by living and working in 139 countries throughout the world. The Peace Corps has become an enduring symbol of our nation's commitment to encourage progress, create opportunity, and expand development at the grassroots level in the developing world.

Description of Request: $237,500—Highway 331 Bridge Replacement in Walton County, Florida. I requested funding in the FHWA Transportation, Community and System Preservation (TCSP) Program account FY09. Funding would be used for design and construction purposes in order to expand U.S. 331 to four lanes. EARMARK DECLARATION

HON. ELTON GALLEGLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. GALLEGLY. Madam Speaker, pursuant to the House Republican standards on earmarks, I am submitting the following information for publication in the Congressional Record regarding earmarks I received as part of H.R. 1105, the Omnibus Appropriations Act, 2009:

Requesting Member: Rep. ELTON GALLEGLY
Bill: H.R. 1105—Omnibus Appropriations Act, 2009

Account: Department of Justice, OJP—Byrne Discretionary Grants

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: County of Ventura

Address of Requesting Entity: 800 So. Victoria Avenue, Ventura, CA 93009

Description of Request: This $280,000 request is for a Crime Lab Scanning Electron Microscope with Energy Dispersive Spectroscopy (EDS) detector and X-Ray Fluorescence capabilities. The EDS detector can identify the major elemental composition of most materials examined as evidence in crimes. It is currently the only tool in the laboratory for such examinations. The addition of X-Ray Fluorescence capabilities increases the analysis sensitivity 10 to 100 times. This will support the Ventura County Sheriff's Regional Crime Lab, the only laboratory in Ventura County doing DNA profiling and analysis.

Bill: H.R. 1105—Omnibus Appropriations Act, 2009

Account: Department of Justice, COPS Methamphetamine Enforcement

Description of Request: This request of $350,000 is for the purpose of providing funds for two California Multi-jurisdictional Methamphetamine investigators. The Ventura County Combined Agency Task Force (VCAT) is a collaborative effort with city, county, state and federal law enforcement agencies working toward the disruption, dismantlement, apprehension, and arrest of narcotic offenders and drug trafficking organizations. Funding would be used for two Senior Deputy investigators that will be utilized to specifically target mid to large-scale methamphetamine dealers and manufacturers and will assist in funding vehicle costs and miscellaneous safety equipment for these two positions. These investigators will be assigned to the Special Services Division, Special Investigations Unit.

Requesting Member: Rep. ELTON GALLEGLY

Account: Department of Justice, COPS Law Enforcement Technology

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: City of Lompoc

Address of Requesting Entity: 100 Civic Center Plaza, Lompoc, CA 93438

Description of Request: This request of $825,000 is for the City of Lompoc's Gang Activity Surveillance Program (GASP), which aims to target early involvement in gang-related activities by Lompoc youth. The Lompoc Police Department does not have the necessary equipment and manpower to tackle this problem alone. GASP will require the purchase of a surveillance vehicle and surveillance cameras with wireless capability that can be interfaced with the City of Lompoc's existing infrastructure to monitor areas prone to gang activity.

Bill: H.R. 1105—Omnibus Appropriations Act, 2009

Account: Bureau of Reclamation, Water and Related Resources

Legal Name of Requesting Entity:

Calleguas Municipal Water District

Address of Requesting Entity: 2100 Olson Road, Thousand Oaks, CA 91360

Description of Request: The Calleguas Municipal Water District Recycling Plant will provide critical support to the mission of providing safe and reliable drinking water to the 600,000 people living in the District's service area. Each year, the District imports over 110,000 acre-feet of water through the California Water Project, and imports constitute 100 percent of Calleguas' supply. The $2 million requested through the Bureau of Reclamation would provide the 25 percent Federal share to continue construction of a facility that will reclaim and reuse over 50,000 acre-feet of water annually. This recycled resource will replace water that otherwise would have to be imported, with the added benefit of water supply in case of delivery interruptions due to natural disasters or attacks on the imported water infrastructure. The funding for this project, authorized by P.L. 104-266, section 1616, will be used for development of a pipeline system that would collect and convey brackish groundwater and recycled water for direct use, stretching local water supplies. The project will facilitate the development of up to 50,000 acre feet of water, per year, for municipal and agricultural uses thereby reducing the need to import water to the region from Northern California.

Bill: H.R. 1105—Omnibus Appropriations Act, 2009

Account: Corps of Engineers, Construction

Description of Request: Matilija Dam is the largest dam in the country targeted for removal. The project, authorized in P.L. 110-114, section 1001(10), will restore the ecosystem of the Ventura River, remove an obstacle preventing the endangered steelhead trout from migrating upstream to spawn and restore the natural flow of sand and sediment from the mountains to the beaches. The $15 million requested will enable the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to complete the project engineering, design and construction work required to move the Matilija Dam Ecosystem Restoration Project towards the next stage of completion. Federal interest in this project and project cost-benefit ratios are documented in the conclusion section of the joint federal-local Matilija Dam Ecosystem Restoration Project Feasibility Study, completed in 2004 with an estimated total project cost of $130 million. Project costs will be shared 65/35 between the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and the Ventura County Watershed Protection District.

Description of Request: During flooding in 2005, large volumes of alluvium eroded from the banks of Santa Paula Creek and were transported downstream and deposited in the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers (USACE) fish ladder, damaging the facility and further impairing fish passage. This $4 million funding request would be used by the USACE to fulfill their responsibility to clear the debris and make repairs to the fish ladder and other facilities in the affected area.

Description of Request: Encompassing more than 1,600 square miles, the Santa Clara River watershed is the largest in Southern California and is divided into two almost equal parts by the Los Angeles-Ventura County line. Since 1991, a group of more than twenty-six stakeholders has been developing the Santa Clara River Enhancement and Management Plan (SCREMP) for the 100-year floodplain. Recognizing the continued pressure of urbanization in both Los Angeles and Ventura Counties that may affect the floodplain and environmental resources in the Santa Clara River Watershed, the Ventura County Watershed Protection District, Los Angeles County, and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers (USACE) agreed to cooperate in expanding the SCREMP to complete a feasibility study for the Santa Clara River Watershed Protection Plan. This request of $2 million would represent the USACE's 50% share.

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: City of Santa Maria

Description of Request: In order to protect the City of Santa Maria and the fertile Santa Maria River basin, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers (USACE) built the 26-mile Santa Maria River levee between 1959 and 1963 at a cost of roughly $5.5 million. In 1998 a 600-foot breach occurred west of Santa Maria and flooded agricultural lands. Fortunately, the urban areas were not impacted. The USACE spent just under $1 million at the time to close the breach and built four small groins that attempt to slow the current along that section of the levee. In changing its course, the Santa Maria River now attacks a portion of the levee directly opposite a large residential development. The USACE has stated that they will not provide 100-year flood certification, leaving the citizens of Santa Maria vulnerable. This request of $8.5 million would provide funding to allow the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to restore and certify the levee thereby saving the residents of Santa Maria from having to purchase expensive flood insurance. Santa Barbara County has estimated that it will cost roughly $26 million to protect northern Santa Barbara County from flood damage.

CSUCI is preparing to offer a much-needed registered nurse licensure program and a bachelor of science in nursing degree program. Address of Requesting Entity: 2100 Thousand Oaks Blvd., Thousand Oaks, CA 91362

Description of Request: This request of $5 million is for the widening of the US-101 and SR-23 Interchange from the Los Angeles/Ventura County line to Moorpark Road (US-101) and Hillcrest Drive (SR-23). The proposed improvements include the extension of existing auxiliary lanes in both directions, conversion of auxiliary lanes to mixed-flow lanes, addition of a northbound lane, realignment and widening of ramps at the interchange, and the construction of soundwalls and retaining walls. The improvements are necessary to relieve congestion along the 101 and 23 Freeways in the City of Thousand Oaks. CalTrans recently began the three-year project to widen the Route 23 Freeway connecting to the 101/23 Interchange. Completion of the improvements is crucial to achieve the congestion benefits of the project. The Ventura County Transportation Commission considers both improvements as integral parts of a single congestion relief project. Since the widening of the freeway is now underway, the interchange improvement needs to move forward without delay.

Description of Request: This request for $1.5 million is for the City of Santa Paula to assist with its plan to repair and expand public athletic facilities and gathering areas at Teague Park. The park, initially constructed in 1976, has served as the primary recreation area for the City of Santa Paula. Teague Park is the primary recreation and gathering site for the majority of Santa Paula residents. Santa Paula's rapid population growth has resulted in a significant strain on the park's resources and facilities. This heavy use has left the park dilapidated and unsafe. The improvements will provide safer sports facilities, along with safer, more accessible park amenities for non-sport uses.

TRIBUTE TO JACK POLLOCK

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. SMITH of Nebraska. Madam Speaker, I rise today to remember a fellow Nebraskan who made our state proud in so many ways. Jack Pollock, from the town of Ogallala, Nebraska, was long a fixture in the Nebraska newspaper industry and an inductee to the Nebraska Journalism Hall of Fame.

Unfortunately, Jack passed away earlier this week. My heart goes out to his wife, Beverly, and his family.

Each year, the NEBRASKAland Foundation celebrates Nebraska's entrance into the union. During this event, the Foundation honors distinguished Nebraskans for the impressive contributions to the State of Nebraska.

This year, Jack was selected to receive the WagonMaster Award, which recognizes citizens for their leadership in causes which benefit our state or nation, and who have set a tremendous example to others. This was an honor which was richly deserved, and I can think of no one better.

Jack's dedication to his craft, his profession, and his community truly sets the bar high for the rest of us. He will be missed, but he will continue to set an example for others to follow.

NATIONAL PEACE CORPS WEEK

HON. JAMES P. MORAN

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Madam Speaker, I would like to take a minute to recognize an enduring legacy of John F. Kennedy—the Peace Corps—in recognition of its 48th anniversary this year and to commend 48 constituents from Northern Virginia currently serving in 35 countries around the world. It is an honor to represent these young people, as well as to serve with colleagues in both the House and Senate who have served our country in the enhancement of citizen diplomacy. I hope all Americans will join us in supporting and expanding this enduring commitment to convey our values as a nation.

A year ago, Fareed Zakaria wrote that after last November's election, "America will have to move on and restore its place in the world. To do this we must first tackle the consequences of our foreign policy of fear. Having spooked ourselves into believing that we have no option but to act fast, alone, unilaterally and preemptively, we have managed in six years to destroy decades of international good will, alienate allies, embolden enemies and yet solve few of the major international problems we face."

The London Financial Times last year reported that the U.S. has suffered a significant loss of power and prestige around the world in the years since the beginning of this century, limiting our ability to influence international crises, according to an annual survey from a well regarded British security think-tank. The 2007 Strategic Survey of the non-partisan International Institute for Strategic Studies picked the decline of U.S. authority as one of the most important security developments of the past year—but suggested the fading of American prestige began earlier, largely due to our failings in Iraq.

One of our most special and effective citizen agencies of public diplomacy is the Peace Corps. Think of this—more than 195,000 volunteers have served this venerable legacy of former President Kennedy, serving in 139 countries—where they bring our values to other peoples, and bring understanding and appreciation of other cultures back home.

The greatest gift of the Peace Corps and other civilian programs is not just that ordinary Americans share their values and our culture with other peoples, but also that when volunteers return, they bring greater understanding and appreciation of other cultures.

Foreign policy is not just what we do, but also who we are. America as a place has often been the great antidote to U.S. foreign policy—and it should be again. Again, as Mr. Zakaria wrote: "When American actions across the world have seemed harsh, misguided or unfair, America itself has always been open, welcoming and tolerant . . ."

At the end of the day, our openness is our greatest foreign policy. We have succeeded not because of the ingenuity of our government, but rather because of efforts like this unique program to keep ourselves open to the world—to sending our people out across the countries of the world to share our unique culture, our goods and services, our ideas and inventions, our people and cultures. This openness, this civilian diplomacy, has allowed us to make friends across boundaries. It will be central to our place as a nation in the future.

This week, as we celebrate National Peace Corps Week, we honor volunteers old and young who have served in developing countries since President Kennedy's call to service in 1961 in places as diverse as China, Mali, Azerbaijan, Macedonia, El Salvador, and Namibia. This can be lonely and demanding service, but service that can create enduring friendships and values that transcend boundaries and cultures.

Today, more than 8,000 Peace Corps volunteers around the world are currently providing training and education in 76 countries. These volunteers each donate their time and skills for over two years, in order to make a difference in the world and to promote understanding between cultures. By offering their valuable skills and showing a passion for helping others, they show the world that Americans value learning and cross-cultural exchange.

Volunteers work in areas of education, health and HIV/AIDS, business development, environment, agriculture and youth, and must often be creative and flexible when living and working in new cultures and learning new languages. The resulting experience is rewarding for all involved, and it highlights the importance of cooperation and involvement between cultures around the globe.

When volunteers return home and share their overseas experiences with their communities, the Peace Corps helps Americans as much as the people in developing countries. From recent college graduates to doctors with decades of experience, volunteers choose to use their valuable skills and education to help people all over the world, but their work affects their lives and our place in the hearts of friends around the globe long after returning home.

This week we remember the dedication and passion of Peace Corps volunteers, young and old, current and returned. We thank them for their service, and encourage more Americans to volunteer with the Peace Corps.

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Locks and Dams 2, 3 and 4, Monongahela River, PA
Address of Requesting Entity: Pittsburgh District at the Wm. S. Moorehead Federal Bldg. 100 Liberty Avenue, Room 1828, Pittsburgh, PA 15222

Description of Request: Appropriation in the amount of $15,900,000 for the Lower Monongahela River Project is located in Southwestern Pennsylvania and was authorized for construction by the Water Resources Development Act (WRDA) of 1992. This project addresses the deteriorated condition of the navigation facilities along the Lower Monongahela River. The project is to build a new dam at 2 (Braddock), new locks at 4 (Charleroi) and then to remove the Locks and Dam at 3 (Elizabeth), creating a single 30 mile pool. The dam at 2 is now complete but the old dam 3 cannot be removed until the locks are completed at 4. Specific concerns were the very real risks of navigation system failure related to the poor structural condition of Locks & Dam 3, and the fact that industry must continue to rely on a single chamber at Locks 4 on the Monongahela River. Ground was broken in 1994 and the project was to be completed in 2004 or in 10 years. However, the slow pace of funding forced inefficient decisions, which now mean the best schedule for total project completion, now 2016, provided that the project continues to receive optimal funding. The funding delays created greater than normal maintenance problems. The condition and sustained operability of Locks and Dam 3, and Locks 4 is a significant and growing concern. The 100-year-old Locks and Dam 3 are among the oldest structures operating on the inland navigation system, and the most structurally deficient navigation facility on the Monongahela River. The larger locks will afford industry a 27% savings in economy scale. The challenge is to put the Lower Monongahela River Project on an efficient funding schedule.

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Upper Ohio Navigation Study

Description of Request: Appropriation in the amount of $4,015,000 for the Upper Ohio River, defined as Emsworth, Dashields, and Montgomery (EDM) Locks and Dams, is a multi-year feasibility investigation to determine the best navigation improvement project. EDM are the three oldest locks on the Ohio River navigation system. Two major problems associated with the locks are: 1) their structural condition; and 2) the lock chamber sizes are too small to efficiently accommodate modern tow configurations.

Account: Interior, EPA, STAG Water & Wastewater Infrastructure Project

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Borough of Dormont

Address of Requesting Entity: 1444 Hillsdale Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, 15216

Description of Request: Appropriation in the amount of $138,000 for the Mattern Avenue Storm Sewer Project. The Mattern Avenue storm sewers in Dormont borough are flawed in their design and need to be replaced. Runoff from a nearby hill is not being carried into the sewer and the runoff water is lying in the basin. The original storm sewer design was flawed. During the winter months, a sheet of ice between six to twelve inches thick develops over the storm sewers and along Mattern Avenue, a high mileage road. This creates a major safety concern. In order to remedy this problem, the existing storm sewers will need to be replaced along Mattern Avenue and two additional storm sewers will need to be added at the basin. This will ensure that runoff is being collected and carried into the storm sewers.

Nearly 100,000 schoolchildren, adults and seniors are reached through a broad array of programs. Education programs fill the gaps of music program budget cuts in the schools as musicians join educators and PSO staff to plan, implement and evaluate programs that target the very young through high school-aged students. Programs take place in the schools and at Heinz Hall. Community Engagement programs connect audiences throughout the Pittsburgh region with the PSO using a variety of innovative outlets. Most community Engagement concerts raise money for community causes as 100% of ticket proceeds of these performances stay in the community. In 2005–2006 over $50,000 was raised for community projects in seven different communities.

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Plumbers Local Union 27 & Steamfitters Local Union 449

Address of Requesting Entity: Plumbers Local Union 27 and the Steamfitters Local Union 449 at 1040 Montour West Industrial Park, Coraopolis, Pennsylvania, 15108 and 1517 Woodruff Street, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, 15220

Description of Request: Appropriation in the amount of $190,000 for the Western Pennsylvania Pipe Trades Regional Training Project. The members of the Steamfitters Local Union no. 449 and the Plumbers Local Union No. 27 are professionals that work together to meet difficult schedules and solve unusual mechanical requirements and applications in today's competitive marketplace. Both unions address the need for more skilled workers by providing a comprehensive, extensive training program for those entering the pipe trades industry. The Plumbers Local Union No. 27 Apprenticeship Program focuses on teaching students about codes, drainage and water supply. This program offers training for commercial work on commercial and industrial buildings larger than three stories, including the installation of the water and gas systems in large multipurpose dwellings, such as apartment buildings or major nursing and assisted living homes. Their work in hospitals is particularly important, as they install the systems that distribute oxygen and other essential medical gases to operating, recovery and patient rooms. The Steamfitters Local Union No. 449 Apprenticeship Program focuses on areas such as refrigeration, steam heating and welding. The program offers instruction on the installation and maintenance of the pipes that carry hot water, steam, air or other liquids or gases needed for manufacturing or other industrial purposes. The Steamfitters Local 449 and The Plumbers Local 27 are feeling the pinch for more trained apprentices for the construction, high tech, and manufacturing industries in the Western Pennsylvania area. In addition, there is a shortage of proficient welders now and in the near future. Due to the decline in economy, unemployed pipe trade union workers need to be retrained in order for them to be proficient in the pipe welding and plumbing maintenance to help keep the above mentioned buildings running efficiently. In addition to retraining unemployed union workers, new apprentices need to go through the proper classes and gain the best education in order to master the required skill.

CARIBBEAN ECONOMIC CRISIS—IMPORTANCE OF THE UNITED STATES SUPPORT

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. RANGEL. Madam Speaker, I stand before you today to acknowledge the importance of the United States' presence in the Caribbean during these difficult economic times and to enter into the record an editorial from the Carib News by Basil Wilson entitled "Jamaica and the World Economy."

As the world deals with the difficult economic challenges, there needs to be a renewed economic commitment to the Caribbean nations, who are also suffering from the spiraling effect of the weakened world economy.

For many years, the United States has cultivated a relationship with the Caribbean that involved a strong history of generous remittances and a prospering reciprocal trade relationship. As a result, both the U.S. and the Caribbean have benefited.

The United States must continue to uphold strong trading ties with the Caribbean islands to make certain their Gross Domestic Product is not greatly compromised. This is also not the time to decrease our level of relief efforts in the Caribbean community. We must understand that an economic decline in the First World results in an economic catastrophe in these Caribbean areas.

As the world tries to gain control of the warring economic calamity, let us not forget that our neighbors and friends in the Western Hemisphere are also dealing with the adverse effects of the global economy. It is especially during these times when there is a greater reliance on the Caribbean Diaspora's kindness and compassion to sustain the economic viability of their families. The U.S. government needs to be aware of the needs of the governments in the region for assistance in providing a necessary social safety net.

TRIBUTE TO HANS SMITH

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. COSTA. Madam Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the life of Hans Smith of Fresno, California who passed away at the age of 66 years old. Hans is survived by his wife Janet and his sons Chris and Esben along with their families.

Hans was born on February 16, 1942 in Sacramento, California to Frank and Josephine Smith. Hans grew up in Sacramento and attended local schools graduating from Sacramento High School in 1959. He next graduated from Fresno State University with a degree in Industrial Technology. Upon graduating he went to work for IBM in San Jose, California. While at Fresno State he met his future wife, Janet. Following Janet's graduation, they married and made their home in Los Gatos, California. While living in Los Gatos, Hans and Janet had their two sons, Chris and Esben. Wanting to raise their children in a less stressful environment, Hans and Janet moved to Raisin City, California in 1975. Hans became a farmer when he and Janet bought 40 acres of prunes.

Hans worked for his father-in-law, who was also a farmer, while getting his own farm started. Hans' farm was truly a family farm. Hans and his wife and sons could often be found working together in the orchard. Hans joined Sunsweet Growers in 1975. He remained a loyal Sunsweet grower for the next 33 years. Hans planted another 80 acres of prunes in 1980. When the new orchard came into production, Hans was able to stop working for his father-in-law. The farm was still a family affair with Hans and his sons taking care of most of the work.

Hans was elected to the Board of Directors of Sunsweet Growers in 1985. He served on the board for the next 23 years, until his death. Hans was a tireless promoter for the prune industry and Sunsweet in particular. He was always available to any grower who had questions about prunes. He gave help and advice to many growers when they entered into the prune industry. Beginning in 1998, Hans diversified into the raisin and almond industries. He farmed 180 acres at the time of his death.

It goes without saying that Mr. Hans Smith was an honorable man with a commitment to family, friends and Sunsweet that will forever live in the lives of the people he so graciously touched. I am honored and humbled to join his family in celebrating the life of this amazing man who will never be forgotten.

INTRODUCTION OF THE MENTORING FOR ALL ACT OF 2009

HON. SUSAN A. DAVIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mrs. DAVIS of California. Madam Speaker, I rise today to introduce the Mentoring for All Act of 2009 to support and greatly enhance youth mentoring efforts in the United States.

We currently face a mentoring deficit in our country. An estimated 15 million children could benefit from a healthy mentoring relationship, but no responsible adult mentor is available. We would see amazing results by reducing this deficit.

In fact, studies show the benefits of youth mentoring on our children. Those who have a healthy mentoring relationship are more likely to graduate from high school and go to college. They are less likely to turn to drugs or substance abuse. Children who grow up with a caring mentor are more likely to live full and productive lives.

The Mentoring for All Act will increase the number of children who will benefit from a responsible mentor and improve the quality of our mentoring programs nationwide.

Specifically, "Mentoring Partnerships" are the central entity providing assistance and guidance to the youth mentoring organizations within a state or region. This legislation will strengthen mentoring programs on both the local and state levels by supporting Mentoring Partnerships.

A Mentoring Partnership provides training and technical assistance, recruits mentors, engages statewide leadership, and advances research and knowledge for successful mentoring. That is, the partnerships support local organizations that operate mentoring programs and provide in most cases a state-wide infrastructure network to coordinate success. The partnerships have led to stronger mentoring programs and more children in healthy mentoring relationships.

This legislation will provide grants to Mentoring Partnerships and sub-grants to local mentoring organizations to directly support youth mentoring. In addition, the legislation will connect individual state Mentoring Partnerships to a central location through the Corporation for National and Community Service, increasing communication and information sharing nationwide for successful outcomes.

Madam Speaker, investing in youth mentoring programs is a worthy endeavor. It is time we acted to provide a mentor to our children in need of a responsible role model. Thank you very much for considering this legislation.

EARMARK DECLARATION

HON. MARY BONO MACK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mrs. BONO MACK. Madam Speaker, pursuant to the Republican Leadership standards on earmarks, I am submitting the following information for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD regarding earmarks I received as part of H.R. 1105, the Omnibus Appropriations Act, 2009:

1) Requesting Member: MARY BONO MACK
Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Energy and Water Development, Bureau of Reclamation, Water and Related Resources Account

Entity Requesting: Rancho California Water District (RCWD), 42135 Winchester Road, Temecula, CA 92590

Description of Earmark:

RCWD's project will substantially expand use of recycled and raw water in Riverside County, free up treated water to serve 70,000 new households in Southern California by converting agricultural demands from treated to recycled and raw water, shifting 144 cfs peak demand off MWD's treated water system, providing for additional recycled water reuse of 16,000 AF/year, relieving pressure from the Bay Delta and Colorado River, increasing annual storage by 10,000 AF/year, reducing carbon emissions by 4.9 million pounds/year. RCWD completed a feasibility study, which ensured viability of the project and was approved by Bureau of Reclamation (2007).

RCWD's Fiscal Year 2009 $50,000 allocation will go toward design and construction—already underway this year—of a 48-inch pipeline to expand local recycled and raw water resources.

Spending Plan:

Project Expenditures—

RCWD's Fiscal Year 2009 $50,000 amount will go toward design and construction—already underway this year—of a 48-inch pipeline to expand local recycled and raw water resources. The total cost for this phase of the project is estimated at $28,000,000. The federal funding allocation will receive a non-federal/local match of $26,000,000, or 92 percent. The non-federal funding match is provided by RCWD. Federal funds will be used for final design and beginning construction of the 48-inch pipeline to transport raw water from MWD's aqueduct for storage in Vail Lake.

2) Requesting Member: MARY BONO MACK
Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Energy and Water Development, Corps of Engineers, Construction Account

Entity Requesting: Eastern Municipal Water District, 2270 Trumble Road, P.O. Box 8300, Perris, CA 92572-8300

Description of Earmark:

$946,000 is provided for a project that will produce potable water from an otherwise unusable groundwater resource through the construction of a three million-gallon per day (MGD) reverse osmosis desalter, feed-water pipelines, and brackish water wells in the Perris South sub-basin. In addition to reducing future demand for imported water from the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta and the Colorado River, project benefits include salinity management for expanded water recycling and protection of high-quality groundwater in basins adjacent to the South Perris Basin.

The Perris II Desalter is a vital component of Eastern Municipal Water District's (EMWD) desalination program which will ultimately generate up to 12,000 acre-feet per year of potable water and remove 50,000 tons of salt out of the basin every year. Projects such as this will move EMWD toward its goal of drought-proofing its region and providing reliability and flexibility to its water supply. EMWD has received funding authorization under P.L. 106-554, Div. B, Sec. 108 (d)(52) for implementation of the desalination program.

Spending Plan

Project Expenditures:

Total Project Cost	$30,000,000
Total State/Local Contribution	$7,500,000
FY09 State/Local Contribution	$500,000
FY09 Federal Funding	$946,000

3) Requesting Member: MARY BONO MACK

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Energy and Water Development, Corps of Engineers, Investigations Account

Entity Requesting: Riverside County Flood Control & Water Conservation District, 1995 Market Street, Riverside, CA 92501

Description of Earmark:

$215,000 is provided for the Heacock and Cactus Channels project that will provide flood control through the widening and deepening of the channels, as well as construction of facilities designed to safely convey the tributary flows to a currently existing ultimate outlet downstream. A reduction in flooding will not only benefit the local community whose drains back up during storms, but it would also allow March Air Reserve Base to better safeguard its equipment and infrastructure from flood waters and ensure that the military's readiness for overseas deployment at this facility is not adversely affected.

Funds will be used to award and construct the project. At this time, the Corps has already completed an Initial Appraisal Report and Project Management Plan under its Section 205 Program, as well as executed a Feasibility Cost Sharing Agreement that would take into account the federal benefits that would accrue as a result of this project, which have been estimated to be as much as 75 percent.

Spending Plan

Project Expenditures:

Total Project Cost	$30,000,000
Federal Share	$28,400,000
Non-Federal Share	$1,600,000

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Energy and Water Development, Corps of Engineers, Construction Account

Description of Earmark:

$3,349,000 is provided and will be used to award and construct the project's entire Phase II reach, which includes protection for Old Town Temecula, as well as to complete the Design Documentation Report and the preparation of plans and specifications for Phase III's Multi-Purpose Detention Basin.

The Murrieta Creek Flood Control Project will provide 100-year flood control, environmental restoration and recreation benefits to the cities of Murrieta and Temecula. The project, which will be constructed in four distinct phases, will include a 250 acre detention basin to attenuate flows from the over 150 square mile watershed and which, once completed, will reduce citizens' and businesses' exposure that requires many of them to carry flood insurance. The project will also create seven miles of soft earthen channelization that will result in the development of a riparian habitat corridor throughout the length of the project, which can become a safe home for several listed endangered species that have already been found to exist nearby. This channel will not only facilitate species movement and connectivity to existing wildlife preserves, but will also create an extensive natural wetlands system that can efficiently remove contaminants from stream flows and help ensure improved water quality for local residents and soldiers stationed at the Camp Pendleton Marine Base.

The project covers the Murrieta Creek and surrounding region beginning just upstream from Old Town Murrieta to Vineyard Parkway-Tenaja Road (Phase IV) and running downstream south of Old Town Temecula, including Old Town Front and Pujol Streets (Phase I). Flood protection and ecosystem restoration will cover areas in between these two points that include the Santa Rosa Water Reclamation Facility, the region's commerce center near US-15 and Historic Old Town Temecula.

Spending Plan

Project Expenditures:

Total Project Cost	$117,000,000

Entity Requesting: Coachella Valley Mountains Conservancy and the Friends of the Desert, 45480 Portola Ave, Palm Desert, CA 92260

Description of Earmark:

$1,300,000 is provided for acquisition of 612 acres (a 544 acre property, and two 40 acre parcels) by BLM to protect important lands in the Santa Rosa and San Jacinto Mountains National Monument. The 544 acre parcel is bounded by BLM land to the north and east. The property abuts the existing Andreas Hills residential development and is located within the City of Palm Springs. The property contains portions of two trails proposed as year-round trails in the Coachella Valley Multiple Species Habitat Conservation Plan (MSHCP); thus, providing recreation opportunities in the Monument. It also contains a palm oasis. The two 40 acre parcels are also largely surrounded by existing BLM land, and provide habitat for the bighorn sheep.

Spending Plan:

Project Expenditures—

The acquisition cost is $1,305,000 for all three properties.

6) Requesting Member: MARY BONO MACK

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Interior and Environment, Bureau of Land Management, STAG Water and Wastewater Infrastructure Project

Entity Requesting: The City of Hemet, 445 E. Florida Avenue, Hemet, CA 92543

Description of Earmark:

$275,000 is provided for this project that will encompass improvements that include artificial recharge facilities, over 35 acres with a raw water capacity of 7500 acre feet per year, piping, valving and the construction of ponds in the San Jacinto River bed.

Spending Plan:

Project Expenditures—

Funding will be used for environmental studies, planning, and engineering. The entire cost of Phase I will cost $19 million. The project will be completed in approximately 4 years once the funding has been secured. The project partners are the City of Hemet, Eastern Municipal Water District (EMWD), the City of San Jacinto, and Lake Hemet Municipal Water District (LHMWD).

7) Requesting Member: MARY BONO MACK

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Interior and Environment, Bureau of Land Management, Capital Improvement and Maintenance (construction)

Entity Requesting: United States Forest Service, Keenwild Helitack Base, 28500 Highway 243, Mountain Center, CA 92541

Description of Earmark:

$600,000 is provided for the Keenwild Helitack Base. The Keenwild location in southern California is strategic to initial attack fire-fighting on the San Jacinto Ranger District and the Santa Rosa and San Jacinto Mountains National Monument. Intense fires in California have, in recent years, included the Gilman Fire and Esperanza Fire near Palm Springs in my district, where sadly five brave United States Forest Service firefighters lost their lives. The fires throughout San Diego County and other parts of southern California were a stark reminder to place priorities on preparedness.

The Keenwild Helibase has been submitted twice for reconstruction in recent years through normal Region 5 Forest Service procedures. The current facilities are clearly outdated given the important role the workers play.

Spending Plan:

Project Expenditures—

The U.S. Forest Service recently committed $450,000 to the project, but the $600,000 will go to helping the building project reach the amount needed for completion.

8) Requesting Member: MARY BONO MACK

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, Department of Education, Higher Education Account

Entity Requesting: California State University San Bernardino—Palm Desert Campus, c/o CSUSB main campus, 5500 University Parkway, San Bernardino, CA 92407

Description of Earmark:

$190,000 is provided to equip a nursing lab for the school's nursing and science education program. The need for nursing and health science education has been voiced throughout the Coachella Valley.

Spending Plan:

Project Expenditures—

The funds will be spent for outfitting the simulation lab of the Health Sciences building, which provides necessary real-life experience needed by nursing students. The lab provides a computer-model-driven, full sized simulator for students to practice their patient care skills.

9) Requesting Member: MARY BONO MACK

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, Department of Health and Human Services, Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA)—Health Facilities and Services Account

Entity Requesting: County of Riverside, Riverside County Medical Center, 26520 Cactus Avenue, Moreno Valley, CA 92555

Description of Earmark:

$523,000 is provided in order for the Medical Center to be able to adequately fulfill its role as the primary first responder hospital for emergency, trauma and disaster. There is great need for expansion of the trauma room, as the Medical Center is the Emergency First Responder for the County of Riverside with a population of 1.75 million. Currently, the RCRMC Trauma Unit is equipped with one undersized trauma room with a limited 168 sq ft of space. This room is much too small to meet any critical needs of the patient population. The absence of an adequately sized trauma unit can result in extensive delays in crucial, life saving treatment, in multi-casualty situations.

Spending Plan:

Project Expenditures—

All funds will be dedicated to expanding the trauma room at the Riverside County Medical Center.

10) Requesting Member: MARY BONO MACK

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA)—Substance Abuse Treatment Account

$95,000 is provided to expand the existing substance abuse services and counseling to the youth who utilize the SafeHouse of the Desert facility. This unique program provides services to at-risk youth in the Coachella Valley, and consists of an in-house and Aftercare programs.

Spending Plan:

Project Expenditures—

$95,000 will be used for the expansion of the substance abuse office/counseling center and for operational program costs. Nearly 50% of the total project costs will be provided through private funds.

11) Requesting Member: MARY BONO MACK

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, Institute of Museum & Library Services, Museum and Library Services

Entity Requesting: The National Autry Center, 4700 Western Heritage Way, Los Angeles, CA 90027

Description of Earmark: $167,000 is provided for the Autry National Center's new facilities in Griffith Park.

Spending Plan:

Project Expenditures—

The funds will be used to support the design, fabrication, and installation of educational immersion environments and visible collections storage.

12) Requesting Member: MARY BONO MACK

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Division I—Transportation, Housing, Urban Development and Related Agencies—Terminal Air Traffic Control Facilities Replacement

Entity Requesting: City of Palm Springs, 3200 East Tahquitz Canyon Way, Palm Springs, California 92262

Description of Earmark:

$800,000 on behalf of the City of Palm Springs, California, for the replacement of the Palm Springs Air Traffic Control Tower Facility. Funding for FY09 will be used for construction of the new tower facility to improve air traffic efficiency and help expand air service. The Coachella Valley is one of the fastest growing regions in the State of California. Therefore, it is critical that we provide the residents and visitors who fly in and out of Palm Springs International Airport (PSP) with the expanded air service that meets their needs. Expanding the airport will better serve airline passengers at PSP, while relieving congestion at Los Angeles Airport (LAX) and other strained airports.

Spending Plan:

Project Expenditures—

This is a recurring expenditure and the monies are expected to be spent in the Spring of fiscal year 2010 for the construction of the Air Traffic Control Tower (ACTC) at Palm Springs International Airport (PSP).

13) Requesting Member: MARY BONO MACK

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Division I—Transportation, Housing, Urban Development and Related Agencies—Buses and Bus Facilities

Entity Requesting: SunLine Transit Agency, 32-505 Harry Oliver Trail, Thousand Palms, CA 92276

Description of Earmark:

$475,000 is provided for SunLine Transit Agency. SunLine Transit Agency is the transit provider in the Coachella Valley, serving more than 35 million people per year in California's fastest growing communities. Recently, SunLine completed an analysis of existing services in order to evaluate the need for new service routes and better transit choices. This requested funding would be used to increase the span of service and improve access for residents, as well as purchase new buses to meet the needs of disabled persons who require the transportation for reasons such as medical appointments.

Spending Plan:

Project Expenditures—

The total projected cost for SunLine is $593,750 for FY 2009. The Federal share of funding will be $470,000, and SunLine's matching share will be $118,750. In addition, SunLine has already committed $86,025 of the Agency's local funds toward the on-going efforts via funding in the current Short Range Transit Plan. The funds received will be used to augment funding awarded to SunLine through the Congestion Mitigation Air Quality Program toward the planning, development and construction of a transit hub in conjunction with SunLine's proposed Administrative, Operations and Maintenance Building in Thousand Palms.

14) Requesting Member: MARY BONO MACK
Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Division I—Transportation, Housing, Urban Development and Related Agencies—Interstate Maintenance Discretionary

Entity Requesting: Coachella Valley Association of Governments (CVAG), California 73–710 Fred Waring Drive, Suite #200, Palm Desert, CA 92260

Description of Earmark:

The earmark provides for $475,000 for improvements to Interstate 10/Ramon Road/Bob Hope out of the Federal Highway Administration's Interstate Maintenance, Corridors and Borders program. As this project is critical to alleviating traffic congestion in the Valley, funding for the project is being sought in cooperation with the Coachella Valley Association of Governments (CVAG). The existing road facility at this location was constructed approximately 46 years ago. This interchange provides primary cross freeway access between the north and the south sides of the Valley as well as area connectivity with the Interstate Highway System.

Spending Plan:

Project Expenditures—

The estimated cost of this project is $46,774,044, so the federal contribution will be supplemented with other monies to reach this total.

15) Requesting Member: MARY BONO MACK
Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Division I—Transportation, Housing, Urban Development and Related Agencies—Surface Transportation Priorities

Entity Requesting: Riverside County Transportation Commission (RCTC), 4080 Lemon Street, 3rd Floor, Riverside, CA 92502–2208

Description of Earmark:

The earmark provides for $570,000 for the Alameda Corridor Grade separation. The Alameda Corridor Grade separation remains a high priority of the Riverside County Transportation Commission, and state and local government. More than 68 million tons of freight pass through Riverside County to the rest of the country, but very little of this freight originates or ends in the County. Traffic and trains are halted at a number of crossings throughout the Coachella Valley. This grade separation would allow the flow of traffic, reduce congestion and delays, cut down on the air pollution, and increase efficiency of freight transportation. Money was appropriated for FY 2008, FY 2006 and FY 2005 grade separation projects. This year's requested funding would continue to aid the Coachella Valley's effort to streamline the traffic flow at these various crossings.

Spending Plan:

Project Expenditures—

The total projected cost for Alameda Corridor East in Riverside County is $980,500,000, with an unfunded balance of $565,500,000. Currently, local matching funds are $179,500,000. The State is matching funds of $152,700,000. Two grade separations in Riverside County have been completed (including one in the Coachella Valley), two are under construction, and two more could be under construction in the later part of FY 2009 if sufficient funds are available.

16) Requesting Member: MARY BONO MACK
Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Division I—Transportation, Housing, Urban Development and Related Agencies—Surface Transportation Priorities

Description of Earmark:

The earmark provides for $380,000 for the City of Coachella, California, for the first phase of an overpass and interchange project. The completion of the overpass and interchange on 86S Expressway at Avenue 52 is critical to the safety of passengers traveling on roads in this area. State Highway 86 used to be a rural 2-lane road, but as a result of rapid population growth in the region and new road developments, traffic traveling 65 miles/hr must come to a full stop at the Expressway and Avenue 52 intersection. This requires a drastic adjustment in speed to allow for traffic to access the Expressway. This is usually a contributing factor to traffic accidents that occur in this area and, for this reason, addressing the problem has become a priority of Federal, state and local government. The funding requested will assist in the project approval, environmental documentation and preliminary engineering needed to complete this critical overpass and interchange project.

Spending Plan:

Project Expenditures—

The funding requested will assist in the project approval, environmental documentation and preliminary engineering needed to complete this critical overpass and interchange project.

17) Requesting Member: MARY BONO MACK
Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Division I—Transportation, Housing, Urban Development and Related Agencies—Economic Development Initiatives

Entity Requesting: City of Indio, 100 Civic Center Mall, Indio, California 92201

Description of Earmark:

The earmark provides for $142,500 for the City of Indio for the development of a local community center. As an ongoing effort to revitalize the City of Indio and accommodate its fast-growing population, the City has repaved roads, renovated parks and museums, and enhanced water systems. As a part of this ongoing community development project, the requested funding will be used by the City of Indio to develop a community center in which the local youth can participate in a variety of sports and activities.

Spending Plan:

Project Expenditures—

$142,000 will be devoted to the construction costs or equipment costs associated with the local community center.

18) Requesting Member: MARY BONO MACK
Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Department of Justice, OJP—Juvenile Justice

EARMARK DECLARATION

HON. VERN BUCHANAN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. BUCHANAN. Madam Speaker, pursuant to the Republican Leadership standards on earmarks, I am submitting the following information regarding earmarks I received as part of H.R. 1105, the Omnibus Appropriations Act, 2009:

Requesting Member: Congressman VERN BUCHANAN

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Health Resources and Services (HRSA)—Health Facilities and Services

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Sarasota County

Address of Requesting Entity: 1660 Ringling Blvd. Sarasota, FL 34236

Description of Request: I secured $190,000 for a Health Facility in Englewood, Florida. Sarasota County is seeking to construct a new health facility in the community of Englewood. The facility will be located in the southern most portion of Sarasota County and will serve the residents of both Sarasota and Charlotte counties. The facility will improve access to health care and a variety of human and social services programs for residents.

Requesting Member: Congressman VERN BUCHANAN

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Corp of Engineers—Investigations

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: City of Sarasota

Address of Requesting Entity: 1565 First Street, Sarasota, FL 34236

Description of Request: I secured $150,000 for Lido Key beach re-nourishment. The middle portion of Lido Key Beach is the most seriously eroded segment. This section of beach is generally very narrow due to the ongoing erosion problem, which has been accelerated by several storms from 1982 to the present. As a result, the damage to Lido Key Beach and adjacent structures from even moderate storms has increased and greater losses can be expected from future storms. The beach loses an average of almost 11 feet of width each year.

In a Reconnaissance study report approved by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers in May of 1997, the Corps found that the Lido Key Beach Nourishment project "is technically sound, economically justified, and socially and environmentally acceptable." The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers has recommended the nourishment of 1.56 miles of shoreline. Ratios in excess of 1 to 1 are required for the Corps to find that a proposed shoreline protection project meets its national economic benefit test.

The project was fully authorized by Section 364 of the Water Resources Development Act of 1999, P.L. 106-53.

Requesting Member: Congressman VERN BUCHANAN

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Corps of Engineers—Construction

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Manatee County

Address of Requesting Entity: 1112 Manatee Ave W. Bradenton, FL 34205

Description of Request: I secured $3,828,000 for Wares Creek Flood and Coastal Storm Damage Project. The Wares Creek Project involves dredging approximately three miles of the waterway for flood control purposes. It seeks to extinguish "muck and sediment" from the mouth of the creek. The project was initially authorized in the Water Resources Development Act of 1996 and is endorsed by the Manatee County Commissioners. It received $4.7 million in funds last year from the Omnibus Appropriation bill.

Requesting Member: Congressman VERN BUCHANAN

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Corps of Engineers—Operations & Maintenance

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: West Coast Inland Navigational District

Address of Requesting Entity: 200 East Miami Avenue, Venice, FL 34285

Description of Request: I secured $2,076,000 for the West Coast Inland Navigation District (WCIND) under the Army Corps of Engineers, Operation and Maintenance account for maintenance dredging of the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway (GIWW), (a.k.a. Intracoastal Waterway, Caloosahatchee River to Anclote River), Florida.

The areas in need of maintenance dredging include Longboat Pass (Manatee County), Venice Inlet (Sarasota County), mouth of Caloosahatchee River (Miserable Mile in Lee County), and the Boca Grande Bayou area (Miller's Marina in Lee County) of the GICW. With the Committee's help, Congress appropriated $1.4 million (FY'04 & FY'05 combined) for the required design, engineering, permitting, and initial dredging for these projects.

In 1945, in the Rivers and Harbors Act, Congress authorized the GICW to be maintained at a width of 100-feet, and a depth of nine-feet between the mouth of the Caloosahatchee River, near Ft. Myers, and the Anclote River, north of Tampa. The GICW channel runs through six counties (Pinellas, Hillsborough, Manatee, Sarasota, Charlotte, and Lee) and links natural deep-water sections of bays through a series of man-made channels, thereby providing for the safe passage of commercial goods, and access to commercial fishing grounds. Dredging of the GICW commenced in 1960 and was completed in 1967, at which time the WCIND began maintenance activities.

HON. HOWARD P. "BUCK" McKEON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. McKEON. Madam Speaker, pursuant to the Republican Leadership standards on earmarks, I am submitting the following information regarding Member priority requests I received as part of H.R. 1105, the "Omnibus Appropriations Act of 2009."

Requesting Member: Congressman HOWARD P. "BUCK" McKEON

Bill Number: H.R. 1105, Omnibus Appropriations Act of 2009

Account: Department of Justice, Juvenile Justice Programs

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: The City of Victorville

Address of Requesting Entity: 14343 Civic Drive, PO Box 5001, Victorville, CA 92393

Description of Request: I requested and received a Member priority request totaling $82,500 to assist with the Uturn Gang Prevention Program evaluation and assessment component. Uturn Gang Prevention Program will focus on elementary school age at-risk youth, along with their immediate families. The focal point will be three areas of accountability: home, school and community. The Uturn program aims to work with at-risk families willing to make a two-year commitment to involvement in services. The goal is to develop at risk children's full personal potential so that they will not be attracted to gang involvement.

The City of Victorville will contract evaluation and assessment services through California State University San Bernardino, College of Social and Behavioral Sciences, Department of Social Work. Evaluation and assessment services will track participants' behavioral changes, school attendance, communication skills, academic trends, family involvement, and communication skill sets.

Ultimately this program will evaluate and assess the individual and collective development of the youth and families. This program will enhance the family structure and strengthen values. The progress of the program participants will be tracked every 6 months for a two year period insuring behavioral, emotional and family stability. The success of the program insuring gang life will be less attractive and irrelevant to the youth.

Bill Number: H.R. 1105, Omnibus Appropriations Act of 2009

Account: Department of Justice, Law Enforcement and Interoperable Program (COPS Technology)

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: City of Palmdale, California

Address of Requesting Entity: 38300 Sierra Highway, Palmdale, CA 93550

Description of Request: I requested and received a Member priority request totaling $100,000 for the City of Palmdale's Technology Acquisition for Joint Law Enforcement Emergency Operations Center. The City of Palmdale is vulnerable to earthquake and fire disasters, which have been identified in the City's local hazard mitigation plan. While the City has an emergency operations center, it is currently inadequate to accommodate a full-scale deployment of staffing to respond to a catastrophic event.

Additionally, the City's contract law enforcement agency, the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department, does not currently have a departmental operations center that is adequate to service their needs in a disaster. The new site will allow the City flexibility in its response, a larger facility to accommodate joint operations between the City of Palmdale, the Los Angeles County Fire Department and Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department. This project will allow the City of Palmdale to better respond to natural or man-made disasters. It will provide an alternate facility to be jointly used by the City, law, and fire branches.

Requesting Member: Congressman HOWARD P. "BUCK" McKEON

Bill Number: H.R. 1105, Omnibus Appropriations Act of 2009 Account: Department of Justice, Juvenile Justice

This project involves constructing de-nitrification facilities at the City's wastewater reclamation facility (WRF) to reduce effluent nitrate levels and expand and upgrade the WRF from a secondary to a tertiary treatment facility. This project is critical to reducing the amount of nitrate pollution generated by the City's WRF and mitigating the overdraft of the Mojave River basin, the Southern California High Desert Region's sole natural source of water. In FY08, the City of Barstow received $500,000 to partially fund the de-nitrification facility construction. tect public access to the The Pacific Crest Trail (PCT). Land acquisition would occur in the following areas: Agua Dulce/Soledad Canyon, CA to relocate the trail off dangerous roadway, Pilot Rock, OR to acquire privately owned parcels from willing sellers within the Cascade Siskiyou National Monument that include the PCT, Plum Creek Timberlands, WA to protect the trail corridor from development pressures, Tejon Ranch, CA to reroute the trail from the temporary Mojave Desert route to the originally proposed crest route, and for program administration.

The Pacific Crest Trail (PCT) is the western treasure of America's scenic trails, spanning 2,650 miles from Mexico to Canada through California, Oregon and Washington. Thousands of hikers and equestrians enjoy this national treasure each year. The need for federal assistance is apparent as the PCT crosses or is near 26 National Forests, 7 National Parks, 5 State Parks, 4 Bureau of Land Management resource areas, and several state and county parks and has been a part of the National Trail System since October 2, 1968.

Description of Request: I requested and received a Member priority request totaling $380,000 for the City of Palmdale's Transportation Center to expand the train platform to accommodate the need for additional Metrolink train cars. The project provides for an extension of the existing Metrolink platform by 170 feet, from 510 feet to 680 feet, to conform to current Metrolink standards, which were adopted after construction of the center. Construction of 170 feet of platform would also include shelters, lighting, signage and drainage. Since 2005, the number of visitors has increased dramatically, especially Metrolink train riders. It is estimated that the train riders occupy 80% of the available parking spaces at the Center (approximately 600 of the 730 spaces).

Metrolink estimates that there are 6,100 riders during the weekday and that number is anticipated to grow 6–8% each year, necessitating additional train cars. Currently the train platform can only accommodate 6 Metrolink train cars (which is the current configuration for this line), while the latest standards call for a train platform to accommodate 8 train cars (the platform was constructed to Metrolink's standards in effect at the time). Local funding for the project includes: $5.64 million from Metropolitan Transportation Authority (Metro); $320,000 from Antelope Valley Air Quality District; $208,000 from Antelope Valley Transit Authority; $200,000 from Los Angeles County; and $129,000 from Antelope Valley Union High School District.

This project will address the need to increase and augment business recruitment and retention of small businesses (1 to 25 employees) in the City of Palmdale and surrounding areas. The project will enhance connections between area firms and available public and private business resources, which are designed to increase worker skills preparedness, reduce the potential for employee lay-offs and business closures, and promote continuing local economic development and growth.

Description of Request: I requested and received a Member priority request totaling $900,000 for the County of Los Angeles Department of Public Works consisting to construct Phase 1B of the North Los Angeles County Regional Recycled Water Project (Regional Project). Approximately 8.5 miles of 24-inch-diameter recycled water pipeline, a 1.5 million-gallon storage reservoir, and a pump station will be constructed to add to Phase 1A of the Regional Project that was previously constructed cooperatively by the City of Lancaster and Los Angeles County Waterworks District No. 40, Antelope Valley (District). Phase 1B will add a recycled water pipeline that runs along Division Street to Avenue K, along Sierra Highway to Rancho Vista Boulevard, and along Rancho Vista Boulevard to 10th Street West. The storage reservoir will be constructed at an existing tank site near Rancho Vista Boulevard and 10th Street West, and the pump station will be constructed near Avenue E and Division Street.

Phase 1B represents a critical component of the estimated $120 million Regional Project to construct a recycled water backbone distribution system to serve the cities of Lancaster, Palmdale, and surrounding unincorporated communities in the Antelope Valley. Phase 1B includes the necessary infrastructure to serve recycled water to customers with identified uses for 2 billion gallons of recycled water per year. The beneficial use of recycled water will increase the reliability of the Antelope Valley's limited water supplies, decrease reliance on imported water and local groundwater supplies, and provide a viable means for reusing treated wastewater.

The County's request for the project will be matched by $17.5 million in non-Federal funds.

TRIBUTE TO MRS. ANGELA E. RANDALL

HON. JOSÉ E. SERRANO

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. SERRANO. Madam Speaker, in recognition of Black History Month 2009, I rise to honor a woman of great stature in our community, Mrs. Angela E. Randall. For nearly sixty years Mrs. Randall has called the South Bronx home; most of that time, thirty-seven years to be precise, she spent in the service of young people. Thousands knew her growing up as a caregiver, a mentor, an educator, and a role model. She has touched the lives of so many that if we knew nothing else about her besides her deep and lasting commitment to our children, it would be enough to know that this is a woman of exceptional character. But we are fortunate to know much more about her than that: a community activist in the truest and noblest sense, Angela Randall has spent a lifetime trying to make this community strong from the ground up, and for that she deserves to be commended.

Angela E. Randall was born in 1928 in New Orleans, Louisiana. She received a Bachelor's Degree from Southern University in Baton Rouge and a Master's Degree from Teacher's College at Columbia University. Academically gifted and not content to stop there, Mrs. Randall further advanced her education at the New School for Social Research and later at Lehman College, where she studied Social Organization and Management. Then in 1968, after working as an Assistant Actuary at Teacher's Retirement System, Mrs. Randall took a position for which she is perhaps best known in the South Bronx: Program Director of the Hunts Point Multi-Service Center, Inc., directing the robust Family Day Care Program. She was the first person to hold this position, and it was there that over the next thirty-seven years Mrs. Randall provided quality, affordable day care to thousands of children in the Bronx, as well as created jobs for hundreds of women in the community by training them to become licensed caregivers.

Mrs. Randall's work with children and mothers is but one aspect of an exceptionally active, well-rounded life. She has belonged to the same place of worship for over a half century, St. Anselm's Catholic Church in the Bronx. There she serves as a Eucharistic Minister and Lecturer, and is also a member of the Parish Council. In addition, Mrs. Randall is Chairperson of the Lincoln Medical and Mental Health Center Auxiliary Board, which she joined in 1976, and acts as Secretary of the Lincoln Hospital Community Advisory Board. She belongs to a number of professional associations including: the Bronx Chapter of the NAACP, the National Council of Negro Women, and is a past Vice President of the Downtown Bronx Democratic Club. Moreover, she has also been the recipient of numerous awards over the years. In 1972 she received the First Puerto Rican Conference Award in recognition of her work with youth, day care, housing and seniors; in 1984 she received the New York State Outstanding Achievement Award from the Bronx Life Members Guild; in 1992 an apartment building on Trinity Avenue in the Bronx was named in her honor the Angela Randall Apartments; and in 2003 she was named Woman of the Year by Lincoln Hospital, just to name a few.

Madam Speaker, Angela Randall owns a full and deeply impactful life. Her compassion and love for young people is known by many, and her influence stretches further than can be measured. For example, how many children did she help to raise and nurture over the past three decades? How many young minds did she help to enrich at a critical stage of development? And more: where are these young people now as a result of her efforts? How many have gone on to become fathers and mothers, find gainful employment, or otherwise assume positions of leadership and responsibility? Angela Randall is someone whose reach has long exceeded her grasp, and because we know her to be a person of integrity, empathy, and faith, we also know that all those whose lives she has touched have been warmed by her spirit, and benefited from her wisdom. Madam Speaker, I ask that my colleagues join me in recognizing a model citizen, and a living testament to selfless devotion to others, Mrs. Angela E. Randall.

TRIBUTE TO MONTFORD POINT MARINES

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Ms. CORRINE BROWN of Florida. Madam Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the Montford Point Marines, the first black Marines.

As Marines, they fought the enemy, integrated the Armed Services and changed their country. On the land and on the sea, the Marines have led the way. At home, the fight was within the Corps, however, the Barriers soon fell because of a few good men.

Today's generation of Marines serve in a fully integrated Corps where one-fifth of the strength of the Corps are African Americans. African-American officers, noncommissioned officers, and privates are spread throughout the Corps and their service often escapes special notice.

The fact that there was a time when there were no Blacks allowed in the Marines should not be overlooked.

At the urging of his wife, Eleanor, and threats by civil rights activist, A. Philip Randolph with a march on Washington, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt signed Executive Order 8802 establishing the Fair Employment Practice Commission. The commission prohibited racial discrimination by any government agency.

With the stroke of his pen on June 25, 1941, President Roosevelt's Executive Order allowed Blacks to serve as Marines and marked the beginning of the end of officially sanctioned segregation in America.

On August 26, 1942 Howard P. Perry of Charlotte, North Carolina was the first African-American recruit to arrive at Montford Point. From August 1942 throughout the end of World War II, 20,000 black men were trained at Montford Point and inducted into the Marine Corps.

Although black troops were trained to be Marines they were kept separate from the white troops. Even after they were shipped off to battle zones, they still served in exclusively all black units. African-Americans continued to serve in segregated units until the Fall of 1949 when an executive order from President Harry S. Truman established a policy of full integration.

That same year, the first African American women, Annie E. Graham of Detroit, Michigan, Ann E. Lamb of New York City, and Annie L. Grimes of Chicago, Illinois, enlisted into the Marines, respectively.

Madam Speaker, today I rise today to pay tribute to some of America's unsung heroes. To all of the Annie Grahams, Ann Lambs, Annie Grimes, Edgar Huffs, Frederick Branches, Gilbert "Hashmark" Johnsons, James Ferrens, Frank Petersens, and Thomas McPhatters of this world, I say Thank you.

Thank you for your service to our country and we will never forget your sacrifice.

HONORING HARALSON COUNTY COMMISSION CHAIR ALLEN POOLE

HON. PHIL GINGREY

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Madam Speaker, in celebration of Black History Month, I want to continue recognizing African Americans from throughout Georgia's 11th Congressional District who have had a major impact on their community.

Today, I rise to honor Allen Poole of Buchanan, Georgia in Haralson County. Allen Poole has selflessly served his community and the State of Georgia throughout his life. For more than 18 years, Allen Poole served and protected his community as a Georgia State Patrol Officer. While with the Georgia State Patrol, Allen was assigned to the Honor Guard and also served on special security details for governors and presidential nominees.

After retiring from the State Patrol, Allen became the first African American ever elected to the Haralson County Board of Commissioners, where he has been appointed Chairman. Currently serving his second term as Commission Chair, Allen continues to work to improve his community while serving as a wonderful example of a dedicated public servant.

Madam Speaker, I ask that my colleagues join me in thanking Chairman Allen Poole for his leadership and service to the people of Haralson County and his commitment to the betterment of his community.

TRIBUTE TO MASON COUNTY SCHOOL DISTRICT SUPER- INTENDENT TIM MOORE

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. DAVIS of Kentucky. Madam Speaker, I rise today to congratulate one of my constituents, Mason County School District Superintendent Tim Moore of Maysville, Kentucky. On January 31st, Superintendent Moore received the F.L. Dupree Outstanding Superintendent Award from the Kentucky School Board Association.

The Dupree Award was created by Kentucky School Board Association and the family of the late F. L. Dupree, Jr., who was a member of the former London Independent Board of Education and a lifelong supporter and promoter of public education in Kentucky.

Superintendent Moore was chosen to receive the Dupree Award for his outstanding service to Kentucky's youth and to the communities of Mason County. Since becoming Superintendent in 1997, he has helped the school district improve its academic rankings, and meet all the goals outlined by the No Child Left Behind program. Additionally, he has fostered better relationships between students, faculty, parents and staff and helped the district rebound from debt by bringing the general fund balance up to $4 million.

Last year, former U.S. Secretary of Education Margaret Spellings and I traveled to the Mason County School District to learn about the innovative ways Superintendent Moore has dealt with the challenges faced by rural schools. During the visit, Superintendent Moore helped lead roundtable discussions with the Secretary, teachers, students and parents to discuss the local impact of federal education law in Kentucky and the improvements that can be made. Secretary Spellings and I were very impressed with Superintendent Moore's commitment to the students and to improving the learning environment in Mason County.

Superintendent Moore has inspired countless children and has been an exceptional leader in the Fourth District.

Madam Speaker, I ask you to join me in commending Superintendent Tim Moore for his achievements.

INTRODUCTION OF THE GREEN STREETS ACT OF 2009

HON. RUSS CARNAHAN

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. CARNAHAN. Madam Speaker, I rise today to introduce the Green Streets Act of 2009. Cities and States across the country are having a hard time affording the asphalt needed to repair their crumbling streets due to increasing cost of asphalt. This increase in the cost has been caused by many refineries forgoing asphalt production to instead produce more profitable products. As a result, communities in my district and across the country are postponing roadwork until transportation departments can better allocate funds without breaking their budgets.

To provide cash strapped cities and States the much need break in asphalt costs, I have introduced the Green Streets Act, which would promote the research of alternative asphalt binders made from biomass. In my home State of Missouri there is a company that is researching the use of swine manure to replace petroleum as an asphalt binder.

Not only could this potentially cut street repair costs for communities across the country, but would also reduce our greenhouse gas emissions by reducing the amount of biomass left to give off carbon dioxide. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting the Green Streets Act of 2009.

EARMARK DECLARATION

HON. DONALD A. MANZULLO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. MANZULLO. Madam Speaker, pursuant to the Republican Leadership standards on earmarks, I am submitting the following information regarding the nine earmarks I secured as part of H.R. 1105, Omnibus Appropriations Act, 2009. H.R. 1105 is a compilation of nine regular non-security related Fiscal Year 2009 appropriations bills that are each separated into their own divisions.

In Division B, covering the Department of Justice, the Office of the Sheriff in Stephenson County, Illinois will receive $225,000 under the Community Oriented Policing Services Law Enforcement Technology account to place forward-looking infrared (FLIR) equipment on their Bell OH58 police helicopter for use throughout northern Illinois. The Office of the Sheriff of Stephenson County is located at 15 North Galena Avenue in Freeport, Illinois, 61032. Mr. David Snyders is the Sheriff of Stephenson County. The purpose of this funding is to assist Stephenson County with their search capabilities. The FLIR mounts under the helicopter and combines a highly sensitive digital thermal imaging camera with a color video camera inside a single housing. With this unit, the Sheriff's Office of Stephenson County will be able to locate missing persons or felons attempting to hide by their heat signature, regardless of time of day or weather conditions. The helicopter is available at no cost to any local, state, or federal law enforcement agency in northern Illinois, in addition to local fire departments. The Stephenson County Sheriff's Office is a member of the Illinois Law Enforcement Alarm System (ILEAS) in Region 2, which is comprised of 18 counties making it the largest ILEAS region in the state covering a widely dispersed population in rural Illinois.

In Division C, covering the Army Corps of Engineers, the City of Rockford, Illinois will receive $526,000 under the Corps' Investigations account, to continue to conduct the Keith Creek Flood Control feasibility study for the Alpine Dam in the City of Rockford, Illinois in partnership with the Army Corps of Engineers.

The Office of the City of Rockford, Illinois is located at 425 East State Street in Rockford, Illinois, 61104. Mr. James Ryan is the City Administrator of Rockford, Illinois. Currently, the Alpine Dam does not provide reliable flood protection and is at risk of failure, threatening 11,000 residents and businesses along Keith Creek in Rockford, Illinois. The study is necessary for the Army Corps of Engineers of Rock Island District to determine the cost and environmental impact of remedying the threat posed by the Alpine Dam. This was a joint request with Senator RICHARD DURBIN.

In Division D, covering the Small Business Administration (SBA), the Chicago/Rockford International Airport will receive $300,000 from the SBA account to support the operations of a Manufacturing Research and Development/Education Center in partnership with Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University, Northern Illinois University (NIU), Rock Valley College (RVC), and other small business incubator programs in the community. The Greater Rockford Airport Authority is located at 60 Airport Drive in Rockford, Illinois, 61109. Mr. Bob O'Brien is the Executive Director of the Rockford Airport. The center will house classrooms as well as R&D facilities for local small businesses. The new center will support the development of new aerospace small business in the region and host a number of new aerospace related manufacturing companies at a small business incubator. The center will also provide training for the workforce required in these new endeavors.

In Division E, covering the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), the Village of Mt. Morris will receive $500,000 from the State and Tribal Assistance Grants (STAG) Water and Wastewater Infrastructure Project account. The Village of Mt. Morris is located at 105 West Lincoln Street in Mt. Morris, Illinois, 60154. The Honorable Gregory Unger is the Village President of Mt. Morris. The Village of Mt. Morris is planning to design and build a new wastewater treatment plant that will replace the current facility, which is approximately 125 years old. The Illinois EPA has also imposed new operating requirements that will not be met by the current physical condition of the present system. The total estimated cost of the new system to meet 50 year growth projections is approximately $7.5 million. Federal funding is a critical component of the funding package needed to help get this project designed, and moving forward to construction.

In Division F, covering the Departments of Education and Health and Human Services (HHS), I secured three separate earmarks. First, under the Higher Education account, Rockford College will receive $238,000 to equip classrooms and science laboratories with technology to significantly enhance student learning. Rockford College is located at 5050 East State Street in Rockford, Illinois, 61108. Mr. John McNamara is the Vice President of College Development. Federal funding is critical to help upgrade nine antiquated classrooms and two laboratories at Rockford College and convert them to modern smart learning centers. This is a joint request with Senator RICHARD DURBIN.

Second, under the Health Resources and Services Administration account, the Crusader

Clinic in Rockford, Illinois, will receive $238,000 to help fund a new electronic health records (EHR) system. The Crusader Clinic is located at 1200 West State Street in Rockford, Illinois 61102. Mr. Gordon Eggers, Jr., is the President and CEO. The Crusader Clinic is a community health center that serves multiple counties in northern Illinois and provides care to over 40,000 low-income, uninsured, and underinsured patients annually in the region. Because of the growing patient caseload and new federal requirements, this community health clinic now has a great need to implement an EHR system throughout their clinics at an estimated cost of $1 million. This funding will help improve the delivery of medical care to those who would otherwise use the emergency room at local hospitals. This is also a joint request with Senator RICHARD DURBIN.

Third, also under the Health Resources and Services Administration account, the University of Illinois' College of Medicine in Rockford, Illinois will receive $238,000 to help build the National Center for Rural Health Professions. The Rockford campus is located at 1601 Parkview Avenue in Rockford, Illinois, 61107. Dr. Martin Lipsky is the Dean of the Rockford campus of the U of I College of Medicine. The Center will conduct research, develop curricula, implement and evaluate rural medical and health care education models, provide consultation to other medical colleges, and study trends in rural health related to health professional training needs. Medical colleges throughout the U.S. can use the research findings and curriculum models to implement training for rural health professionals to practice in medically under-served rural areas in their respective states. The College of Medicine has raised $4 million in private funds toward this $32 million expansion project. Another $14 million has been committed by the University of Illinois, and the university is also seeking state funding to complete the project.

In Division I, covering the Departments of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) and Transportation, I secured two separate earmarks. First, under the Economic Development Initiatives account at HUD, the City of Freeport, Illinois will receive $237,500 for various public infrastructure improvements. The City of Freeport is located at 230 West Stephenson Street in Freeport, Illinois, 61032. The Honorable George Gaulrapp is the Mayor of Freeport. Freeport wants to make improvements to public infrastructure in the downtown area to promote and support expansion of manufacturing facilities. The funds would be used for a variety of infrastructure improvements, including replacing a water main, upgrading and "undergrounding" above-ground power lines, and various roadway and streetscape upgrades in downtown Freeport to make it a more attractive place to live and work.

Second, McHenry County, Illinois will receive $570,000 under the Transportation, Community, and System Preservation account to widen Rakow Road. The County of McHenry is located at 2200 Seminary Avenue in Woodstock, Illinois. Mr. Peter Austin is the County Administrator of McHenry County. This road project will help relieve traffic congestion and improve safety by increasing capacity to Rakow Road from Ackman Road to Illinois Route 31 by adding two or three through lanes in each direction and adequate turn lanes at the intersections. In 2004 and 2005, there were 566 accidents (71 percent were rear-end collisions) and 171 injuries at this three mile stretch of highway that desperately needs improvement. This request also begins to implement the $5.72 million authorization for this project that I secured as part of the 2005 Surface Transportation Reauthorization Act (Public Law 109-59).

Madam Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to thank the Chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, Representative DAVID OBEY, and the Ranking Minority Member, Representative JERRY LEWIS, and the respective leadership of the six Appropriations subcommittees for working with me in a bipartisan manner to include these nine requests in this spending bill. I also want to thank Senator RICHARD DURBIN, the senior Senator from Illinois, for joining with me on three of these requests.

Mr. KILDEE. Madam Speaker, I rise today to recognize the 22nd anniversary of the naming of Chavez Drive in my hometown of Flint, Michigan. To honor this occasion, and to celebrate the 82nd anniversary of Cesar Chavez's birthday, the Hispanic Latino Collaborative of Genesee County is sponsoring a Citizens March on March 28th along Chavez Drive. The march will be followed by a reception and luncheon on the campus of the University of Michigan-Flint.

After his family lost their farm during the Great Depression, Cesar Chavez spent his childhood as a migrant worker following the crops across the Southwest. After serving in the United States Navy during World War II, Cesar returned to farm work and began his lifelong quest to bring justice, equality and dignity to migrant workers throughout our Nation. He adopted the nonviolent philosophy of Gandhi and founded the United Farm Workers of America. In the face of formidable odds he persevered and after a 5 year struggle against California grape growers, Cesar Chavez won the first union contract for migrant workers and brought about respect for the workers toiling in our fields.

The Presidential Medal of Freedom is awarded to persons that have served democracy and advanced the universal interests of humanity. The list of recipients is an honor roll of individuals that have struggled against adversity for the common good. In 1994, as he posthumously awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom to Cesar Chavez, President Clinton said, "He was for his own people a Moses figure." Cesar Chavez exemplified compassion, dedication and advocacy for farm workers everywhere. He passed away 1 year earlier leaving our world better than he found it.

Madam Speaker, Flint Michigan was the first community in our Nation to honor this great humanitarian by naming a street after Cesar Chavez. I ask the House of Representatives to join me in congratulating the Hispanic Latino Collaborative for honoring the memory of Cesar Chavez and his legacy to the American people.

NATIONAL PEACE CORPS WEEK

HON. LYNN C. WOOLSEY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Ms. WOOLSEY. Madam Speaker, I rise today during National Peace Corps week to honor the immeasurable contributions of the more than 195,000 Americans who have volunteered to serve in 139 countries in the cause of peace since 1961. Through mutual respect and understanding, these men and women have committed themselves to improving our country's relationships with the rest of the world, and I applaud their dedication to communities around the globe.

When President John F. Kennedy created the Peace Corps 48 years ago, he set out to provide ordinary men and women with an opportunity to strengthen developing countries devastated by the effects of poverty, disease, and war. Volunteers have come from all walks of life, some with years of experience and some just out of college.

Peace Corps volunteers have mobilized to combat some of the world's most urgent humanitarian crises, including providing crucial assistance to communities in need of post-conflict relief and reconstruction as well as countries overwhelmed by natural disasters. These men and women have helped economically depressed communities develop new business plans, struggling farmers improve their crop production, and families devastated by HIV/AIDS receive the care they need.

Currently, volunteers are serving in 76 countries, providing development assistance while fostering new bonds of friendship and seeking common ways to address global challenges. Over 400 men and women have volunteered from California's Sixth District, including the following current volunteers: Samantha Atkins, Gail Bachman, Tracey Bloch, Jamie Bowen, Catherine Carlton, John Cervetto, Rebecca Como, Jed D'Abravanel, Fionah Dominis, Jillian Geissler, Emilie Greenhalgh Stam, Daniel Grinnell, Alexis Guild, James Gurney, Amy Howland, Larissa Hsia-Wong, David Hughes, Frank Lester, Ryan Loughlin, Alisha Mayer, Reid Miller, Ryan Reichert, NurAliyya Shelley, Robin Smith, Jessica Souza, and Jessica Wright.

Madam Speaker, the 48th anniversary of the establishment of the Peace Corps is an achievement that we should all commemorate. I celebrate the leadership and accomplishments of these compassionate Americans who have committed themselves to promoting global peace, diplomacy, and understanding.

FEMA INDEPENDENCE ACT OF 2009

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. OBERSTAR. Madam Speaker, I am proud today to introduce H.R. 1174, the "FEMA Independence Act of 2009", a bill to re-establish the Federal Emergency Management Agency ("FEMA") as an independent, cabinet-level agency reporting directly to the President.

This bill restores FEMA's ability to be a nimble and effective response agency, re-instates FEMA's role in building basic emergency management capability around the country, and removes FEMA from the large bureaucracy within the Department of Homeland Security ("DHS") that has hindered the agency's disaster response and recovery efforts for six years.

On March 1, 2003, President Bush delegated to the Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security the responsibility for administering the Federal Government's assistance to States and local governments whose citizens and communities are affected by disasters, and subsumed the Federal Emergency Management Agency into the newly-created Department of Homeland Security.

Since 2003, FEMA has failed the American people. Hurricane Katrina remains foremost in our minds. It is shameful that, to this day, many citizens and communities in Louisiana have still not recovered from the disaster. Beyond Hurricane Katrina, FEMA's performance has continued to be deficient, such as in the agency's inadequate response to the discovery of formaldehyde in FEMA trailers, a serious threat to public health. More recently, residents in Texas experienced significant shortcomings in the delivery of recovery assistance, including debris removal and housing, in the aftermath of Hurricane Ike. Today, the Subcommittee on Economic Development, Emergency Management, and Public Buildings is holding yet another hearing on the status of recovery efforts in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Texas from these hurricanes. The fact that there are still individuals and communities in need demonstrates that dramatic improvements that can and must be made to the Federal government's provision of disaster assistance and leadership in emergency management.

Oversight hearings since 2003 held by the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure have shown a clear correlation between the absorption of FEMA into DHS and the deterioration of FEMA's effectiveness. One reason for this trend is that since becoming a part of DHS, FEMA's emergency management mission has been distorted by a focus on terrorism. Key Federal grant programs that previously helped build basic emergency management and fire fighting capability in communities around the country are now made available only if applicants can show a nexus to terrorism. In the last six years, the Federal Government has spent ten times more on terrorism preparedness (nearly $15 billion) than on core emergency management preparedness ($1.5 billion). Yet since 2000, the President has declared only two disasters because of terrorist attacks, but nearly 500 disasters due to natural hazards.

Further, quick decision-making and the flexibility to shift course as events change are two fundamental hallmarks of successful emergency management. Within DHS, FEMA officials have had to run all decisions through the Secretary of Homeland Security. FEMA has also had to work through the Secretary to access non-FEMA Federal resources in a response effort. These additional layers, which did not exist when FEMA was an independent agency, cause delays, impact the speed and flexibility of services that are provided to citizens and communities, and add unnecessary obstacles following a disaster. Being subsumed in a DHS bureaucracy has impaired FEMA's ability to carry out its mission quickly and effectively.

Since 2003, DHS has centralized disaster response and recovery capabilities at the Federal level, which has shut out FEMA's partnerships with State and local governments, and undermined the emergency management system. DHS has also created separate functions under the direct control of the Secretary to perform functions that by law are the sole responsibility of FEMA, such as pre-designation of individuals to serve as Principal Federal Officials ("PFOs") for disasters during the 2008 Hurricane season. Since its incorporation into DHS, FEMA has also had to rely increasingly on support from contractors, due to a loss of experienced FEMA personnel and a reduction of emergency management capacity at the State and local level as the focus of emergency management grant funding has shifted to terrorism-preparedness programs.

For these reasons, I have long opposed the incorporation of FEMA into DHS. During House consideration of the Homeland Security Act of 2002, I said:

This is July 2002. Let us fast forward to July 2003. The majority has prevailed. FEMA is a box in the mammoth bureaucracy of the Department of Homeland Security. Flood waters are swirling around your city. You call for help. You get the Department of Homeland Security. The switchboard sends your call to the Under Secretary's office which looks up "disaster" on their organizational chart and sends you to the Congressional Liaison Office, which then promises to get a message back to you in 24 hours. Eventually, they find FEMA, by which time you are stranded on the roof of your house waving a white handkerchief and screaming for help. FEMA, the word comes back, sorry, is looking for suspected terrorists some place and will get back to you as soon as we can.

Unfortunately, we have seen these predictions come true. Unless FEMA is re-established as an independent, cabinet-level agency, I expect this history to repeat itself.

After Hurricanes Katrina and Rita, Congress enacted changes to try to fix the problems plaguing FEMA by enhancing the agency's authority within the Department of Homeland Security. Unfortunately, these changes have done little to restore the type of robust emergency management agency that is needed at the Federal level. Tinkering around the edges will not work; fixing this flawed system requires fundamental change. This bill takes the most important and necessary first step to fix the problem—re-instating FEMA as an independent agency.

Specifically, H.R. 1174 affirms FEMA's mission to reduce the loss of life and property and protect the United States from all hazards, by leading and supporting a comprehensive emergency management system of preparedness, response, recovery, and mitigation.

As prescribed by the bill, an independent FEMA will be led by an Administrator and a Deputy Administrator with extensive experience in emergency preparedness, response, recovery, and mitigation from hazards. The bill maintains and strengthens FEMA's regional structure of ten regional offices and three area offices. Each regional office will be lead by a Regional Administrator with a demonstrated ability in and knowledge of emergency management.

The bill provides for the transfer of core emergency management programs and functions to the newly independent FEMA, including: FEMA's disaster assistance programs authorized by the Robert T. Stafford Disaster Relief and Emergency Assistance Act; the National Flood Insurance Program; the Earthquake Hazards Reduction Program; the National Dam Safety Program; the U.S. Fire Administration; the Emergency Food and Shelter Program; and FEMA's programs for Continuity of Operations and Continuity of Government.

The bill does not transfer any grant programs, currently administered by FEMA, that are specific to terrorism, such as the Urban Area Security Initiative and the State Homeland Security Grant Program. This will ensure that the Department of Homeland Security will continue to lead our Nation's efforts to prevent and protect against terrorist incidents and attacks.

The bill further requires the FEMA Administrator to maintain the National Advisory Council and to retain a Disability Coordinator within the newly-established entity; continues the authorization of the National Integration Center within FEMA; and ensures that FEMA will proceed on the development of standards for credentialing and typing in collaboration with the administrators of the Emergency Management Assistance Compact and other State, local, and tribal entities. Each of these activities is currently authorized and being implemented by FEMA.

The transfer of all functions relegated to FEMA by the bill must be completed within 120 days of enactment of the bill.

This matter is far too important, and impacts directly the lives of too many of our nation's citizens, to delay any further. We must act quickly to restore FEMA's autonomy and effectiveness.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting H.R. 1174, the "FEMA Independence Act of 2009".

PRIMARY CARE VOLUNTEER INCENTIVE ACT

HON. KATHY CASTOR

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Ms. CASTOR of Florida. Madam Speaker, America is facing a troubling physician shortage. It is estimated that the U.S. could be short 200,000 physicians by next year, while the number of patients is expected to increase by 24 percent. Furthermore, most medical school students incur more than $100,000 in student debt and primary care doctors are becoming scarce. New physicians are entering more lucrative specialties that better assist in their student debt payoff.

To join efforts that are underway across the country to address health care workforce shortages, today I will introduce the Primary Care Volunteer Incentive Act. This legislation will create a volunteer program for primary care physicians that will allow them to receive medical school loan repayment for their dedication to a community health center with high needs.

The Primary Care Volunteer Incentive Act will implement a program for doctors who specialize in family medicine, general pediatrics and general internal medicine. This program will request a five year volunteer commitment that will help doctors to develop a strong and longstanding relationship with their patients and communities. The program will build on the current National Health Service Corps program by allowing doctors to volunteer only part-time at a community health center in an area with a large primary care physician shortage.

This legislation is a vital step in closing the gaps that exist for medically disenfranchised Americans. Fifty-two percent of uninsured Americans do not have a primary care provider and at least two in five residents in Alabama, Alaska, Florida, Kansas, Mississippi, Missouri, Oregon, South Carolina and Utah have inadequate access to routine health services. We know that lack of access to a primary care provider means that patients are not receiving preventive care, which helps people to lead healthier lives and keeps them out of emergency rooms for preventable and manageable conditions.

Too many of our neighbors are without basic care. Ensuring access and affordable health care should be our top priority. I have seen first hand the positive impact that access to community health care has given my district in the Tampa Bay area, and today my bill will help to see that communities will not continue to suffer losses in primary care providers that cannot be afforded.

INTRODUCTION OF THE PART-TIME FEDERAL EMPLOYEES EQUITY ACT

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Madam Speaker, I rise today to introduce legislation that will correct an inequity in the computation of retirement annuities for some federal employees. The Part-Time Federal Employees Equity Act is intended to help support the federal government's ability to retain current employees in the face of the oncoming wave of retirement that will hit the federal workforce in less than a decade.

I am proud to represent more than 98,000 Virginians who have served our country within the ranks of the federal civil service. Protecting the quality of life of these beneficiaries and ensuring the future strength of the federal retirement system are two of the most important issues to my district. It is essential that Congress support efforts that maintain the integrity, quality and vitality of the federal workforce.

It has been well documented that over the next ten years, the federal workforce will undergo significant demographic changes that threaten the federal government's strength and effectiveness. As the baby-boom generation, which makes up a disproportionately large part of the overall workforce, nears retirement age, federal agencies will face a crisis in manpower, especially within its senior executives and management ranks. Information from OPM shows that approximately "60 percent of the government's 1.6 million white-collar employees and 90 percent of about 6,000 Federal executives will be eligible for retirement within the next ten years."

This likely wave of retirement threatens to drain the federal workforce of its most experienced and talented employees at a pace that will be difficult to replace with a well-qualified, trained workforce. Congress, in coordination with the Executive Branch, must develop an overall strategy with specific policy solutions so that the potential "brain drain" doesn't threaten the efficient delivery of government services.

One leading factor that influences the retention of senior personnel is the retirement package offered by the federal government. As currently structured, the federal retirement system for some workers actually penalizes employees that wish to extend their careers by working part-time. As the federal workforce faces the prospect of losing an unprecedented number of employees over the next 10 years, many of the anticipated shortages can be met with part-time employees. One of the greatest impediments to allowing part-time work are disincentives and restrictions imposed by the federal pension system.

I have introduced the Part-Time Federal Employees Equity Act to address the annuity computations of federal employees retiring under the Civil Servant Retirement System (CSRS). I believe that this legislation can serve the dual purpose of correcting a long-standing inequity for retiring federal employees, as well as offering employees nearing retirement the option for continued part-time service without negatively impacting their retirement benefits.

Over 10 years ago, the 100th Congress included a provision in the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act (COBRA) of 1986 (P.L. 99-272) that amended the civil service retirement law for federal workers with part-time service. Section 15204 prevented part-time employees from being credited with the same number of years of service as those who worked full-time over the same period. Before the law's passage, an individual who had worked part-time for most of his or her career could switch to full-time work the last three years of his or her career and receive the same retirement benefits as someone who worked full-time throughout the same period.

As the Subcommittee knows, federal annuities are calculated by multiplying the average three highest continuous years of salary, times years of service, by an accrual rate. The new methodology determines the proportion of a full-time career that a part-time employee works and scales annuities accordingly. Under the formula, a part-time salary is calculated on a full-time equivalent basis (FTE) for retirement purposes. Thus, a worker's "high-three salary" could occur during a period of part-time service. This often happens when a senior-level worker cuts back on his or her hours. The disproportionate share of these workers appears to be women, who leave the federal service to care for others.

The problem with the new formula is that it has negative consequences for workers hired before 1986. First, it fails to provide the accrued full year of credit for each year of part-time service of workers who, before 1986, had completed part-time service for which they had understood they would receive full-time credit. Second, the formula can have a negative impact on retirees' annuity if the computation of the "high-three salary" occurs during part-time service. Specifically, the formula incorrectly minimizes full-time employment before 1986, which hurts agencies' ability to retain experienced federal workers by offering part-time employment. Finally, this complex formula can lead to computational errors involving annuities with part-time service. There are possibly thousands of civil servants who are eligible under CSRS that may be impacted by the inequity in this law.

My legislative proposal will restore full credit for part-time work performed before 1986, eliminate the adverse effect of part-time service performed late in an employee's career, and provide a simplified annuity computation in cases involving part-time service. Though it is important to eliminate the inequity for future retirees, it is perhaps more important to tear down the artificial barrier to part-time service at the end of an employee's career.

Madam Speaker, I believe that this proposal will correct a long-standing obstacle to part-time service and may help agencies retain qualified federal employees nearing retirement for part-time service.

CELEBRATING THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF MR. AND MRS. LARSON

HON. JIM COSTA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. COSTA. Madam Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Mr. and Mrs. John Philip Larson on the celebration of their 50th wedding anniversary. Phil and Joyce Larson were married 50 years ago on March 21, 1959 in Kingsburg, California. They raised two children and have three grandchildren.

Phil Larson was born on September 5, 1933 in San Francisco, California. His parents moved to the Central Valley where he was raised in the beautiful Fresno County countryside near the town of Kerman, California. Phil graduated a proud Kerman High School Lion in 1951. He joined the U.S. Marine Corps in 1953 and was deployed to Korea on December 22, 1953. In 1956, he was honorably discharged from the U.S. Marine Corps and remained in the U.S.M.C. Reserves until 1961. After serving his country, Phil returned to the family farm. While continuing to farm with his father, he joined the Wilbur-Ellis Company in 1963, and after 38 years he retired in 2000. In 2001, Phil won the seat for District 1 Fresno County Board of Supervisors. Now serving his second term, he is a very influential leader for San Joaquin Valley agriculture. Phil is a true and exemplary public servant to his constituents and the Central Valley.

Joyce Larson was born on May 16, 1935 in the "Raisin Capital of the World," Selma, California. She grew up in the nearby town of Parlier. Joyce graduated a proud Selma Bear in June 1953. She attended California State University, Fresno and graduated in 1957 with a Bachelor's Degree in Home Economics. She taught Home Economics in Fresno at Roosevelt High School between the years of 1957 and 1962 and then taught another year at McLane High School. After raising her children she spent 13 years at Tranquility High School as a Special Education teacher. Joyce also received her Master's Degree in Special Education from Fresno Pacific University in 1994. She retired in 2000.

Phil and Joyce met through their church, which has been a foundation for their love and family. Phil proposed to Joyce in August of 1958 and they were joined in marriage on March 21, 1959. They have lived and raised their children near Kerman, California for the past 50 years. They were instrumental in the founding of the Kerman Covenant Church in 1970. The highlight of their marriage has been their two children, Timothy John and Lisa Renae, who have blessed them with three grandchildren, Lindsey Goodell, Tanner Torrano and Haylee Torrano.

Nothing has been more important than their sense of family and putting God first in their marriage. The love and respect Phil and Joyce have shared has been a tremendous example to everyone who has known them. They are highly esteemed in the communities where they have lived and served, helping many in need.

Congratulations again to Phil and Joyce Larson. Their story is reflective of the American Dream, working hard and playing by the rules to create better lives for themselves and their children. As a result, they have made their community, their church, and the Central Valley a better place to live for future generations.

RECOGNIZING WILLIAM R. KEITH

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. KILDEE. Madam Speaker, I rise today in remembrance of William Raymond Keith, who passed away on January 30, 2009. Bill was born in Jackson, MI on October 24, 1929 to Ruth Arlene Young and Raymond Joseph Keith. Bill graduated from Detroit's Wilbur High School in 1948 and the University of Michigan's School of Banking in 1963.

Bill served in the U.S. Army in Germany in 1950-51, singing vocals with the 82nd Army Band. Employed by Manufacturers National Bank for 19 years, he worked his way up from messenger to branch manager and bank officer. Bill was well respected and admired for his 22 years serving in the Michigan House of Representatives. He chaired the House Education, Colleges & Universities, and Banking and Finance Committees. He was a champion for public education, always fighting to enhance learning opportunities for children. His long years of service took him to many international locations including China, Japan, Korea, France and Germany. The German President awarded him the Officer's Cross of Merit (the highest honor that can be given to a non-German citizen). Bill has received numerous awards for his work in public service. In 1991, he was inducted into the Michigan Education Hall of Fame. During his retirement, he volunteered as a docent at the Michigan Capitol Building, enjoying sharing that beautiful treasure with schoolchildren from around the state.

HON. MARSHA BLACKBURN

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mrs. BLACKBURN. Madam Speaker, I rise today to celebrate the accomplishments of Tony Brown as he receives the 2009 Cecil Scaife Visionary Award at the Musicians Hall of Fame in Nashville.

Simply stated, Tony Brown is a legend in the Nashville music business. As the driving force behind MCA Nashville, Tony has been instrumental in the success of country music superstars from George Strait and Reba McEntire to Wynonna Judd, Trisha Yearwood, Vince Gill and Brooks & Dunn. Tony Brown's efforts have helped artists such as these create what is in essence a soundtrack for America.

But the overwhelming success of these artists is only part of Tony Brown's legacy. He is equally respected for his efforts to broaden the definition of what country music can be by signing and nurturing artists who defy easy categorization. He helped create space in the music business for people like Steve Earle, Lyle Lovett, Rodney Crowell, Kelly Willis and other artists who challenge the boundaries of country music.

Madam Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating Tony Brown as he receives this distinguished award. Please join me in congratulating Tony for his efforts to ensure that Nashville, Tennessee will always be one of the musical and cultural treasures of our country.

The funding would be used to study ways to stop and reverse the depletion of the Ogallala Aquifer in Kansas.

No matching funds are required for this Department of Agriculture project.

Department of Agriculture—Wheat Genetic Research, Kansas: H.R. 1105, the FY 2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act contains $240,000 for Wheat Genetic Research, Kansas, in the Cooperative State Research Education and Extension Service's Special Research Grants Account. The entity to receive funding for this project is the Kansas State University, located at 110 Anderson Hall, Manhattan, Kansas 66506.

The funding would be used to collect, conserve, and distribute wheat genetic and genomic resources; develop improved germ plasm; develop genetic stocks; develop genomic resources; and support training and outreach.

No matching funds are required for this Department of Agriculture project.

In accordance with the February 2008 New Republican Earmark Standards Guidance, I submit the following in regards to the Fiscal Year 2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act found in H.R. 1105.

Water system improvements, City of Derby, Kansas: The Department of the Interior, Environment and Other Related Agencies Fiscal Year 2009 Appropriations Act found in H.R. 1105 contains $1,000,000 for the City of Derby, Water and Wastewater System Improvements. The entity to receive funding for this project is the City of Derby, 611 N. Mulberry, Derby, Kansas, 67037-3533.

The funds will be used to upgrade its municipal wastewater treatment plant in 2009. The Derby Wastewater Treatment Plant presently treats about 1.8 to 2.0 million gallons of wastewater per day. The sludge-handling portion of the treatment process is near its designed capacity, and the treatment plant master plan calls for adding sludge handling capacity. Design goals are to reduce staff hours necessary for the sludge handling process, improve efficiency and reliability, increase flexibility in plant operation, and reduce odors, while maintaining compliance to all regulatory requirements. The City of Derby will also use the funds to help extend the municipal sewer system in the Spring Creek watershed area in 2009.

The City of Derby will provide matching funds as required.

Law Enforcement Technology, City of Wichita, Kansas: The Fiscal Year 2009 Commerce, Justice, Science Appropriations Act found in H.R. 1105 contains $1,675,000 for the Southern Kansas Multi-Jurisdictional SWAT. The entity to receive funding for this project is the City of Wellington, 110 East 10th Street, Wellington, KS 67152.

The funds will be used to procure a Pictometry Visual Intelligence Tool. Pictometry allows federal, state and local agencies to have a common tool to jointly manage emergencies. It captures every square foot of an area from as many as twelve directions. This system captures images that consist of orthogonal (straight down) images like ordinary aerial imaging and images that are oblique (taken from angles) so that features can be easily seen in their entirety. These images reveal the front, back, and sides of objects of interest rather than just their tops. Within seconds, a law enforcement officer can literally view and analyze any house, building, intersection, fire hydrant, tree or any feature in the county from their laptop, workstation, or mobile device. Southern Kansas encompasses a large area of responsibility, and the police and sheriff's departments are low on manpower and equipment. Federal, state, and local agencies will have a common tool to jointly manage emergencies. The Southern Kansas Multi-Jurisdictional SWAT will administer the program for the four selected counties from the 4th Congressional District. The included counties are Cowley, Greenwood, Montgomery and Sumner.

No matching funds are required for this Department of Justice project.

In accordance with the February 2008 New Republican Earmark Standards Guidance, I submit the following in regards to the Fiscal Year 2009 Energy and Water Appropriations Act found in H.R. 1105, the FY 2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act:

Department of Interior—Wichita Project, Equus Beds Division: H.R. 1105, the FY 2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act contains $1,500,000 for the Wichita Project—Equus Beds Division in the Bureau of Reclamation Water and Related Resources Account. The entity to receive funding for this project is the City of Wichita, located at City Hall, 455 North Main, Wichita, KS 67202.

The funding would be used for funding the design on Phase II of the Equus Beds Aquifer Storage and Recovery project. The project involves taking excess flood water from the Little Arkansas River (called above base flow) and depositing that water into the underground aquifer through water supply wells. This project was authorized in 2006 (P.L. 109-299).

This project is authorized for 25% federal matching and will be matched by the city.

Department of Interior—El Dorado Lake, KS: H.R. 1105, the FY 2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act contains $619,000 for El Dorado Lake, Kansas, in the Army Corps of Engineers' Operation and Maintenance Account. The entity to receive funding for this project is the United States Army Corps of Engineers, Tulsa District located at 1645 S. 101 East Ave., Tulsa, OK 74128.

The additional funds will be used to replace tainter gate stems, dam gate trash racks, seal concrete surfaces, and paint bridge steel. The additional funds will also be used to undertake repairs to project recreation areas that were damaged during the record floods of 2007.

No matching funds are required for this Army Corps of Engineers project.

In accordance with the February 2008 New Republican Earmark Standards Guidance, I submit the following in regards to the Fiscal Year 2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act found in H.R. 1105:

I-235/US 54 and I-235/Central Ave Interchange, KS: The Department of Transportation Fiscal Year 2009 Appropriations Act found in H.R. 1105 contains $380,000 for funding for reconstruction of two interchanges on I-235, Wichita, Kansas. The entity to receive funding for this project is the City of Wichita, located at City Hall, 455 North Main, Wichita, KS 67202.

This project will provide for preliminary engineering and right-of-way costs for the reconstruction of the Kellogg (US-54) and Central interchanges on I-235 in western Wichita. The project also involves PE for the reconstruction of the facility to expand it to 6 lanes between the interchanges, a distance of 1.5 miles. The project on I-235 is in the area of Wichita that is experiencing significant population and commercial growth.

The City of Wichita will provide matching funds as required.

Redesign and Reconstruction of I-235 and Kellogg Interchange, Wichita, KS: The Department of Transportation Fiscal Year 2009 Appropriations Act found in H.R. 1105 contains $950,000 for the redesign and reconstruction of the interchange at I-235 and Kellogg in Wichita, Kansas. The entity to receive funding for this project is the City of Wichita, located at City Hall, 455 North Main, Wichita, KS 67202.

The funding used to redesign and make the necessary improvements to this interchange will improve the safety of those citizens traveling through the area and improve the traffic flow. The connection to highway I-235 from Kellogg or U.S. 54 is one of the most dangerous in the county. A shared entering and exiting merge lane onto Kellogg congests traffic as a result of its short length. The steep cover leaf curves to access and exit I-235 require a significant reduction in speed and prove to be especially treacherous when roads are wet, icy or snow-packed.

The City of Wichita will provide matching funds as required.

Advanced Materials Performance Research, National Institute for Aviation Research, Wichita State University, Wichita, KS: The Department of Transportation Fiscal Year 2009 Appropriations Act found in H.R. 1105 contains $2,375,000 for facilities and equipment at the National Institute for Aviation Research at Wichita State University. The entity to receive funding for this project is Wichita State University, located at 1845 Fairmount St, Wichita, Kansas 67260.

The funding will be used to purchase new equipment, hire technical personnel, and conduct research in the areas of metallic and composite structures, crash worthiness, and aging aircraft effects. It will expand and enhance ongoing FAA research regarding flight safety at NIAR.

No matching funds are required for this Federal Aviation Administration project.

21st Street North Railroad Overpass (Broadway to I-135), Wichita, KS: The Department of Transportation Fiscal Year 2009 Appropriations Act found in H.R. 1105 contains $380,000 for the 21st Street Railroad Overpass, Wichita, Kansas. The entity to receive funding for this project is the City of Wichita, located at City Hall, 455 North Main, Wichita, KS 67202.

Funding to create an elevated roadway overpass along 21st Street North from Broadway to I-135 in order to eliminate the lengthy vehicular traffic delays and vehicle entrapment issues associated with multiple at-grade rail crossings located along this segment of a busy east-west arterial city street. This project also connects the 21st Street Redevelopment District to the freeway system in Wichita.

The City of Wichita will provide matching funds as required.

Noise Abatement Along K96, I-235 and Meridian Avenue, Wichita, KS: The Department of Transportation Fiscal Year 2009 Appropriations Act found in H.R. 1105 contains $237,500 for the Noise Abatement K96, on I-235 project, in Wichita, Kansas. The entity to receive funding for this project is the City of Wichita, located at City Hall, 455 North Main, Wichita, KS 67202.

The funding will be used to erect noise barriers that will lessen the adverse impact of excessive highway traffic noise in the Sherwood Glen and Meridian Gardens neighborhoods.

This project has $1.6 million in local matching funds.

National Institute for Aviation Research (NAIR) at Wichita State University, KS: The Department of Transportation Fiscal Year 2009 Appropriations Act found in H.R. 1105 contains $950,000 for research at the National Institute for Aviation Research at Wichita State University. No matching funds are required for this Federal Aviation Administration project.

EARMARK DECLARATION

HON. FRED UPTON

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. UPTON. Madam Speaker, pursuant to the Republican Leadership standards on earmarks, I am submitting the following information for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD regarding earmarks I received as part of HR 1105, the Omnibus spending bill for Fiscal Year 2009.

Requesting Member: Congressman FRED UPTON

1. Dredging of St. Joseph Harbor
Department: Army Corps of Engineers
Account: Operations & Maintenance
Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Berrien County, Michigan

Address of Requesting Entity: Berrien County Administration Center 701 Main St., St. Joseph, MI 49085

Description of Request: This request is for securing funds for dredging both the inner and outer harbor of St. Joseph, Michigan. The inner harbor is a key port for raw materials such as limestone, sand and gravel for state highways. Road and building construction projects in the area receive a majority of their aggregate materials through the three commercial docks located in this harbor. Additionally, it is a major hub for recreational boaters, with over 1,600 boat slips. This project has been authorized through many WRDA acts, is vital to the economic viability of Southwest Michigan, and has the support of the entire community. This project is consistent with the mission of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, and has been authorized through multiple WRDA Acts. Maintaining commerce in St. Joseph Harbor is vital to the economic well-being of Southwest Michigan.

Amount: $793,000

Financial Breakdown: The entirety of this funding will go towards Dredging to 21 feet in the entrance and inner channel of the harbor and 18 feet in the inner river channel and turning basin. Supplemental funds will be provided by Berrien County and local municipalities.

2. Western Michigan University Geological Carbon Sequestration Research and Education Program

Department: Energy

Account: Office of Science Biological and Educational Research Account Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Western Michigan University Address of Requesting Entity: Michigan Avenue, Kalamazoo, MI 49008

Description of Request: This request is for MICHARB, a Geological Carbon Sequestration Research and Education Program for Michigan. The program will develop partnerships with Michigan industry, energy utility companies and State and local governments to create and present educational and research programs to help government decision makers and industry leaders identify and evaluate local and regional potential for Geological Carbon Sequestration in deep Michigan geological formations. There is a national need to remain competitive in a global marketplace by motivating and training geosciences professionals skilled in the area of carbon sequestration. Our nation needs to explore all options to reduce our dependence on foreign sources of energy, and the work being done at the MGRRE is an important step toward that goal.

Amount: $618,475

Financial Breakdown: Faculty, post doctorate, student and professional staff, 36%; materials and supplies for public outreach and K-12 classrooms, 13.6%; travel for public outreach and K-12, 5%; research analytical services and supplies, 13.6%; piggyback drilling, analysis and testing in wells, 31.8%.

3. Benton Harbor Workforce Transformation Program

Department: Labor

Account: Employment and Training Administration Training and Employment Services

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Michigan Works Benton Harbor, MI

Address of Requesting Entity: Michigan Works, 499 W. Main St., Benton Harbor, MI 49022

Description of Request: Michigan Works, a state-supported job recruitment and training organization, is starting a job-training program designed to work in tandem with the upcoming $500 million Harbor Shores mixed-use economic development project being undertaken by Benton Harbor. The basic workforce transformation program, which would be funded by the monies requested here, includes at least three core elements: basic skills training, including workforce literacy remediation; skills training for in-demand, high-growth occupations; and transitional job services. All activities will be based on proven programs administered by workforce training professionals as part of the region's existing and ongoing workforce development activities. All programs will be designed to reduce the unemployment rate, increase the local labor participation rate, increase job readiness, place people into jobs, and increase per capita income. These funds are consistent with the mission of the Employment and Training Administration. Benton Harbor, Michigan is the poorest city in one of the most economically challenged states in America. The magnitude of Benton Harbor's problems is stunning—a workforce with an average 6th grade literacy level and an 80% high school dropout rate by young males. In Benton Harbor 42% of the available workers are out of the workforce, a fact exacerbated by the lack of basic skills needed to maintain employment which has only served as a barrier to attract new employers into the area.

Financial Breakdown: The majority of this funding (around 70%) will go to staffing services, stipends for program participants, as well as literacy remediation services. The remainder of the funding will be provided for training scholarships, community outreach, participant assessments and support services. Michigan Works will provide supplemental funds.

4. Kalamazoo Community Mental Health & Substance Abuse Services Nursing Distance Learning Initiative

Department: Health

Account: Health Resources and Services Administration—Health Facilities and Services Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Kalamazoo Community Mental Health & Substance Abuse Services Address of Requesting Entity: 3299 Gull Rd., Kalamazoo, MI 49048

Description of Request: The Kalamazoo Community Mental Health and Substance Abuse Services agency will partner with Wayne State University's School of Nursing, the only nursing school in Michigan offering an Advanced Psychiatric and Community Public Health Nurse Practitioner degree program, to bring the opportunity through the use of distance learning technology for nurses in Kalamazoo and surrounding communities to participate in this three-year program right in their home communities, rather than have to travel all the way across the State to Detroit. The plan would provide scholarships to local nurses who wish to participate in exchange for a commitment to remain in and serve their Southwest Michigan communities. Southwest Michigan is a medically underserved area, with a shortage of nurses, and a particularly acute shortage of nurses with advanced training to meet community mental health needs. The Kalamazoo Community Mental Health and Substance Abuse Services Nursing Distance Learning proposal promises to be an innovative and successful way to address this pressing need.

Amount: $285,000

Financial Breakdown: The majority of funding for this project (around 60%) will go to nursing faculty, with supplemental funding going to polycom and video conferencing equipment, as well as scholarships for nursing students.

5. Kalamazoo/Battle Creek International Airport Terminal Improvement Project Department: Transportation
Account: FAA—Airport Improvement Program

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Kalamazoo Aeronautics Board of Trustees Address of Requesting Entity: 5235 Portage Road, Kalamazoo, MI 49002

The existing terminal, built in 1958, has undergone three expansion projects during its lifetime and is still over capacity and continues to grow. Expansion of terminal capacity and enplanement levels is critical for the airport to be able to continue to provide efficient service. Additionally, the new terminal will be a "green" building, and as such, will lower operating costs for businesses that utilize it. This request is consistent with the mission of the FAA's Airport Improvement Program. The terminal has been in the works for years, and will provide much needed economic development for Kalamazoo.

Amount: $1,615,000

Financial Breakdown: This funding will go toward costs associated with construction of the terminal, which is a project totaling $34,000,000. A portion of matching funds will be contributed by the Airport in the form of bonds; Airport capital; PFC funds; and State of Michigan funds.

Michigan and New York researchers are taking aggressive measures against fire blight including development of blight-resistant varieties and new, environmentally responsible control strategies. Finding ways to control and curb fire blight is of critical importance to apple growers in my district and elsewhere. This research is very promising, and its results will help apple growers significantly increase their yields.

Amount: $346,000

Financial Breakdown: Approximately, $148,000 is for the salaries of laboratory and field research personnel; and $36,000 is for materials and supplies. Michigan State University

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Michigan State University

Address of Requesting Entity:

Description of Request: Researchers at Michigan State University are leaders in the fight to control Phytophthora capsici, a fungal-like pathogen that lives in the soil and causes numerous plants to rot. Phytophthora management has been complicated by its longevity in soils (10 or more years), its ability to spread in water, its resistance to a key fungicides and lack of disease resistant varieties. Michigan State University has developed new techniques for control and resistant varieties. However, losses caused by Phytophthora have become so large throughout the nation in recent years that the economic viability of the vegetable industries in many states is at risk, and more research is necessary. Since 1996, researchers have leveraged private, state and federal funds to significantly advance disease management. The widespread crop loss caused by Phytophthora capsici will be lessened, keeping family farms and their communities viable. Spread of Phytophthora to new sites will be stopped. Ways to remediate/treat infested ground and water sources will be identified. Integrated management strategies that emphasize cultural methods and environmentally friendly practices will be developed.

Amount: $346,000

Financial Breakdown: This money will provide 346,000 in funding for Phytophthora research at Michigan State University. Approximately 85 percent of the funding will go to researchers, technicians and students. Approximately 15 percent will be used for materials, supplies and administration. Michigan State University has received outside sources of funding for Phytophthora research as well. This funding is consistent with the authorized purpose of the Cooperative State Research, Education and Extension Service.

NATIONAL LINK AWARENESS MONTH

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mrs. DAVIS of California. Madam Speaker, I rise today to introduce legislation to bring awareness to the link between animal cruelty and other forms of societal violence by designating the month of May 2009 as National Link Awareness Month.

This resolution would highlight the need for more attention and resources to be focused on how violence toward animals is indicative of other violent tendencies. By investigating the link further, information could be gathered that will help mitigate societal violence.

Psychological, sociological, and criminological studies have shown that violent offenders frequently had a history of abusing animals during their childhood and adolescence. The FBI has recognized the connection since the 1970s, when its analysis of the lives of serial killers suggested that most had killed or tortured animals as children. Research has also shown patterns of animal cruelty among perpetrators of child abuse, spousal abuse, and elder abuse. In fact, the American Psychiatric Association considers animal cruelty one of the diagnostic criteria of conduct disorder.

The link between animal abuse and domestic violence is a recognized fact. Each year, defenseless pets face the sad and disturbing reality that they will be victims of cruelty and abuse. Domestic abusers commonly torture or kill family pets as a method of exerting control and ensuring submission. This causes victims, children and adults alike, to remain in violent households in order to ensure their beloved pets are not harmed further.

Research indicates that children who are exposed to domestic violence are nearly three times more likely to mistreat animals than children who are not exposed to such violence. Tragically, this behavior is often symptomatic of future abuse toward other animals or human beings. Significant research documents a relationship between childhood histories of animal cruelty and patterns of chronic interpersonal aggression.

Due to the correlation between animal abuse and other forms of family and community violence, animal abuse must be taken very seriously. Human services, animal services, and law enforcement agencies must share resources and expertise to address animal and human related violence in communities. By effectively and comprehensively addressing the link between violence toward animals and other forms of societal violence, we can learn information that will help stop violence in the home as well as the community at large.

Madam Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the designation of May 2009 as National Link Awareness Month so that more awareness will be brought to the link between animal cruelty and other forms of violence in society.

EARMARK DECLARATION

HON. VERN BUCHANAN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. BUCHANAN. Madam Speaker, pursuant to the Republican Leadership standards on earmarks, I am submitting the following information regarding earmarks I received as part of H.R. 1105, the Omnibus Appropriations Act, 2009:

Requesting Member: Congressman VERN BUCHANAN

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Corps of Engineers—Operations & Maintenance

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Port Manatee

Description of Request: I secured $2,483,000 for Maintenance Dredging at Port Manatee.

Funding will be used to perform maintenance dredging as needed (generally not every year). The funds being requested are appropriated in the Corps of Engineers' O&M Account but are entirely derived from the Harbor Maintenance Trust Fund (HMTF). The Trust Fund is financed by a Harbor Maintenance Tax of 1/8 of one percent of the value of imports and domestic traffic and this generates considerably more than the amount actually appropriated by Congress each year for the navigation projects. The requested funds are needed to restore full project dimension of the Phases I and II work.

The Fiscal Year 2009 federal budget for the Army Corps of Engineers includes $2.6 million for Manatee Harbor O&M.

Requesting Member: Congressman VERN BUCHANAN

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Corps of Engineers—Construction

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Port Manatee

Description of Request: I secured $478,000 for a General Reevaluation Report (GRR) on Tampa Harbor.

The GRR is studying the need for improvements to the Tampa Harbor in order to meet projected increases in international commerce. As Florida's largest port (in tonnage), Tampa Port handles in excess of 50 million tons of cargo annually and is West Central Florida's largest economic engine contributing billions of dollars annually to the 7 county region surrounding Tampa Bay. Port Manatee supports 22,000 jobs and has a total economic impact of $2.3 billion. As changes in the global shipping market evolve, both Tampa and Manatee Ports must be able to accommodate modern international vessel fleets which require deeper draft. The GRR will determine the national economic feasibility of further improvements to the Tampa main federal channel.

Requesting Member: Congressman VERN BUCHANAN

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA)—Health Facilities and Services

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Florida Hospital—Wauchula

Address of Requesting Entity: 533 West Carlton Street, Wauchula, FL 33873

Description of Request: I secured $95,000 to support the expansion and renovation of the emergency department. This initiative is vital to the health care infrastructure and clinical services available to Hardee County and the surrounding communities.

Florida Hospital Wauchula is a 25 bed facility specializing in emergency, outpatient and transitional care. In 2000, we became the first Critical Access Hospital in the state of Florida in an effort to enhance the health care services provided to our rural service area. The hospital employs 91 full-time staff, including 5 physicians on General Medical Staff. In addition to our 7-bed emergency department, Wauchula offers diagnostic imaging and lab services and a transitional care unit with short-term skilled nursing and rehabilitation services.

As a rural community with limited medical resources, Hardee County relies on Florida

Hospital Wauchula to provide high quality health care. The emergency department handles over 12,000 visits per year; a volume that taxes the facilities capacity to its limit.

Requesting Member: Congressman VERN BUCHANAN

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Department of Energy—EERE

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Sarasota County

Address of Requesting Entity: 1660 Ringling Blvd., Sarasota, FL 34236

Sarasota County is an established national leader in energy efficient practices as evidenced by its green building and sustainability policies, as well as its private sector and develop alternative energy and green building initiatives. The County will commit its resources to partner with the federal and state governments, universities and the private sector to construct a zero-energy LEED Platinum certified green building to house the Center. This collaboration will promote the application of alternative energy technologies to protect the public safety and welfare of our citizens and communities and contribute to the future sustainability of our state and nation.

Requesting Member: Congressman VERN BUCHANAN

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Department of Justice—COPS Law Enforcement Technology

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: City of Bradenton

Address of Requesting Entity: 100 10th Street West, Bradenton, FL 34205

Description of Request: I secured $200,000 for the City of Bradenton Police Cruiser In-Car Video System.

The City of Bradenton proposes to install in-car video systems for every police cruiser in its fleet. This project not only protects the officer but assists the State's Attorney's Office in case prosecution as evidence collection will be enhanced.

Mr. RADANOVICH. Madam Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Lou Herwaldt upon being awarded with the "2009 Leon S. Peters Award." Mr. Herwaldt was honored at a luncheon held by the Greater Fresno Area Chamber of Commerce on February 18, 2009.

The Herwaldt name has had a lasting significance in the Fresno community. For almost sixty years Lou Herwaldt has been providing vehicles, service and employment to the residents of the Central Valley. In 1955, Mr. Herwaldt went to work for Frank J. Saunders dealership and after nearly twenty years he decided to establish his own firm. In 1969, Mr. Herwaldt opened Sierra-Chrysler Plymouth. In forty years, his dealerships have represented ten auto models, including Oldsmobile, Mercedes Benz, Subaru and Saturn. Throughout his career, he has excelled at all levels and was even named to serve on the General Motors President's Council; he served in the group that developed the new "Saturn" brand for General Motors.

Mr. Herwaldt has also been an active member in the Fresno community. He served thirteen years on the Board of Fresno Community Hospital, including seven years as Chairman. He was instrumental to the formation of the present multi-campus Community Regional Medical Center. He has been a member of the North Fresno Rotary Club for forty years and served as president. Mr. Herwaldt has chaired the boards for the Fresno Leadership Foundation and Fresno Youth for Christ. He has served on the boards of the Fresno Better Business Bureau and Master's College in Castaic, California. Finally, Mr. Herwaldt is a board member of the Fansler Foundation and founded the Herwaldt Foundation, primarily supporting faith-based charitable organizations. He has received many accolades for his contributions including being named the 2002 St. Agnes Hospital Benefactor of the Year.

Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor the accomplishments of Lou Herwaldt. I invite my colleagues to join me in honoring his accomplishments and wishing him the best in future endeavors.

TRIBUTE TO DR. JOHN GROBMYER TEDFORD

HON. MARION BERRY

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. BERRY. Madam Speaker, I rise here today to pay tribute to a dear friend, Dr. John Grobmyer Tedford. His successes are many, but it is his outstanding service to the field of medicine that demands recognition. I am proud to honor Dr. Tedford for his lifetime of service to his patients, his community and our country.

Dr. Tedford was born in Little Rock, Arkansas in 1941 to William L. Tedford and Dorothy Grobmyer Tedford. Aside from his time in college and serving our country in Vietnam, he spent his entire life in Little Rock. He attended Hall High School but graduated from Forrest City High School after Governor Orval Faubus closed Little Rock's high schools in 1958-59 during the school integration struggle. He later went to college to study pre-med at the University of Arkansas at Fayetteville. At the age of 20, he went to the University of Arkansas School of Medicine and received his medical degree in 1966. After meeting through some mutual friends, Tedford married Judy Stoltz on October 28, 1993.

Dr. Tedford was a simple man who avoided fancy material possessions. Instead, he preferred to go to his favorite place, which was a cedar house his family built for him and spend time with nature. He especially enjoyed bass fishing and turkey and duck hunting. In addition, he enjoyed playing doubles tennis with his wife.

Although Tedford enjoyed sports and hunting, his patients were always his first priority. For example, in 1968 he joined the Navy and asked to be sent to Vietnam with the Marines to serve as a doctor, taking care of sick and injured troops. While in Vietnam, Tedford and his battalion were struck by a bomb. Despite his severe injuries, he refused to be evacuated and continued to treat the injured soldiers until he lost consciousness from internal bleeding. For his valiant efforts he was awarded the Bronze Star and a Purple Heart.

Dr. Tedford embodies the old fashioned values of service, leadership and commitment to his community that has made our State and our Nation great. He has dedicated his life to serving people and we are grateful for the impact he left on the lives of all he touched. He will be greatly missed.

HON. EDWARD R. ROYCE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. ROYCE. Madam Speaker, pursuant to the Republican Leadership standards on earmarks, I am submitting the following information regarding earmarks I received as part of the FY 2009 Omnibus.

Requesting Member: Representative ED ROYCE

Bill Number: H.R. 1105—Omnibus Appropriations Act, 2009

Account: Office of Justice Programs—Byrne Discretionary Grants Account

Legal Name Requesting Entity: The City of Westminster

Address of Requesting Entity: 8200 Westminster Blvd, Westminster, CA 92683

Description of Request: Provide $312,200 in FY 2009 to be used for the Criminal Enterprise Initiative, following the Year 1 federal funding provided in 2008. The detectives assigned to the Little Saigon Substation are already in operation, specifically focusing on identifying, investigating and dismantling criminal enterprises, having both national and international implications, within the Little Saigon area. Under this project, the Westminster Police Department's Crimes Against Public Unit occupies office space within the Little Saigon district of Westminster, placing a powerful "investigative engine" into the heart of the area where Asian Criminal Enterprises operate. The total cost of project is $1,061,181 (local match of $748,981). I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Requesting Member: Representative ED ROYCE

Bill Number: H.R. 1105—Omnibus Appropriations Act, 2009

Account: U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Construction

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: County of Orange, California, Watershed and Coastal Resources Division

Address of Requesting Entity: 300 North Flower Street, Santa Ana, CA 92702

Description of Request: Provide $2,612,500 to complete the restoration of the Upper Newport Bay being conducted by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers. The funding will be used for dredging costs. The ecosystem restoration project has started with the $14.7 million of federal funding received for the project through the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers since FY03. The project includes dredging 2.3 million cubic yards total, dredging sediments basins and side channels, restoring estuarine and other habitats, and creating a new Least Tern island. The Upper Newport Bay is one of the last remaining coastal wetlands in Southern California, and continues to play a significant role in providing critical habitat for a variety of migratory waterfowl, shorebirds and many threatened and federally endangered species. It will improve the bay's water quality by reducing sediment inflows and algal blooms, and will preserve Federal navigation channels. The project has significant support at the local, state, and national level, including the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the National Marine Fisheries Service. The project was authorized by Congress in the Water Resources Development Act of 2000 (P.L. 106-541, Section 101), and is consistent with the intended and authorized purpose of the Army Corps of Engineers, Construction Account. The County of Orange, CA has already made available the 35 percent local cost share required for the project. The County received a $13,000,000 Coastal Conservancy Grant, which it has front-loaded for the project. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Requesting Member: Representative ED ROYCE

Bill Number: H.R. 1105—Omnibus Appropriations Act, 2009

Account: Higher Education FIPSE

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Cal State University, Fullerton

Address of Requesting Entity: 800 North State College Blvd, Fullerton, CA 92834

Description of Request: Provide $238,000 in FY 2009 to establish the Center for the Advancement of Teaching and Learning in Mathematics and Science (CATLMS). The proposed center addresses a national problem. One of the core drivers of innovation in the U.S. is its strength in STEM disciplines. Yet, in an increasingly interconnected world, the U.S. has not been keeping pace with its economic competitors. Federal investment would be used for the initial phase to carry out research studies, pursue external funding, and develop collaborations with private sector parties, educational institutions, and governmental agencies. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Requesting Member: Representative ED ROYCE

Description of Request: Provide an earmark of $2,612,500 in FY 2009 to be used toward the completion of the Anaheim Regional Transportation Intermodal Center (ARTIC). ARTIC will be the premier transportation hub serving international tourist destinations that are major contributors to the state and national economies. In 2006, Orange County Transportation Authority (OCTA) acquired the necessary property with $32 million in local funds and launched the master planning effort for the site with the City of Anaheim, which contributed $6 million of city-owned property located adjacent to the ARTIC. In addition, a recent voter-approved sales tax extension assures that OCTA will be able to direct a $2 billion, 30-year revenue stream for improved rail service serving ARTIC. The federal funding requested for FY 2009 will support preliminary engineering and environmental study. This request is consistent with the intended and authorized purpose of the FTA Bus & Bus Facilities Account. The total project cost is estimated at $245 million. HONORING THE FIRST GRADUATING CLASS OF THE RIVERS CORRECTIONAL INSTITUTION RESIDENTIAL DRUG ABUSE PROGRAM

HON. ELEANOR HOLMES NORTON

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Ms. NORTON. Madam Speaker, I rise to ask the House to join me in congratulating the first graduating class of the Rivers Correctional Institution Residential Drug Abuse Program for meeting the high standards required for graduation. I am delighted at your success. I targeted the admission of District of Columbia residents to the drug treatment program as the highest priority at our first hearing since DC residents were transferred to the Bureau of Prisons (BOP) facilities. The reason drug treatment has been the priority issue is because drug abuse is a core reason many residents go to prison in the first place, and drug abuse is a primary reason why many return to prison.

As today's graduates know, many BOP inmates who need the drug treatment you have received cannot be accommodated under the BOP's existing appropriations. You have been fortunate to be accepted into the program, and you have shown yourselves to be worthy of admission by being the first DC residents to graduate from Rivers' new program. Because you have benefitted while many others could not, our expectations of you are great. In return for being among the few who have been admitted to the program, we ask you to remain drug free and to resolve to never see the inside of a prison again. You can do it now.

We know, of course, that you will come home at a time when people without felony records are being laid off and when we in the Congress are still working to find a solution to today's unprecedented economic crisis. Finding work and staying clean may be harder when you come home than when you left. But as pioneers and achievers, I believe in you, and I believe that you will set the example for others who need the program by fighting with determination to surmount any obstacles you may find.

Your own families and close friends are perhaps the only people who, I believe, will be more pleased than I will be to see you when you return. I hope that each of you will stop by my office here in the Rayburn House Office Building at some point to receive my personal congratulations and to have your picture taken with me, especially since, regrettably, I cannot be present in person to see you graduate. Please know that I am proud of the important achievement which you mark with today's graduation ceremony. It is one of the most important milestones of your life so far. Your graduation from the program is so important to me and to the District of Columbia that I will commemorate today's ceremony and your graduation by placing these congratulatory remarks in the Congressional RECORD when Congress returns from its week-long recess that began last Friday.

EARMARK DECLARATION

HON. ZACH WAMP

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. WAMP. Madam Speaker, as a leader on earmark reform among House Republicans, I am committed to honoring House Republican rules that provide for greater transparency. H.R. 1105 The Fiscal Year 2009 Omnibus Appropriations contains the following funding that I requested:

Requesting Member: Rep. ZACH WAMP

Account: COPS—Methamphetamine Enforcement and Clean-up Grants

Legal Name Requesting Entity: Tennessee Bureau of Investigation—Tennessee Methamphetamine Task Force

Address: 901 R.S. Gass Blvd., Nashville, TN 37216—2369 c/o: 1110 Market Street, Suite 332, Chattanooga, TN 37402

Description of Request: The Tennessee Bureau of Investigations and the Tennessee Methamphetamine Task Force requested funding for the comprehensive effort to operate a state-wide methamphetamine task force system in Tennessee and received $2.4 million. The Tennessee Methamphetamine Task Force will train and equip local law enforcement officers throughout the State of Tennessee as a cooperative effort to combat this growing problem. Over the past several years, the use, production, and distribution of methamphetamine has proliferated throughout the State of Tennessee. Due to lack of funding, law enforcement has been frustrated in its efforts to adequately address this problem. The program is designed to reduce the manufacture, distribution and use of methamphetamine both domestic and foreign in Tennessee. The intelligence programs provided by the Meth Task Force allow the limited resources of federal, state and local law enforcement agencies to strategically identify and dismantle or destroy the most significant offenders and their organizations. The emphasis will remain on providing 24 hour response to state and local law enforcement agencies fighting the methamphetamine epidemic. The Tennessee Meth Task Force has earned a reputation as one of the most active and innovative task forces operating in the country.

In 2003, President Bush signed legislation establishing Moccasin Bend National Archeological District on Moccasin Bend. The formation of the national park on Moccasin Bend and the planned interpretive visitor's center requires that the local law enforcement's firing range be moved to another site. The firing range has been in use by local law enforcement agencies for decades for training. The cost of such a move will be born by local governments.

Description of Request: The City of Chattanooga's center for economic development initiatives, The Enterprise Center, requested funds for completion of the High-Speed Ground Transportation/Maglev Feasibility Study in the Chattanooga-Nashville Corridor that has already been approved by Congress and will receive $570,000 for this project. These funds will be used to coordinate with the U.S. Federal Railroad Administration and Volpe National Transportation Research Center to complete all elements of the study which include further engineering in relation to high speed rail ascending the Cumberland Plateau, development of more detailed ridership and revenue information that will provide a basis for development of a financial plan for the project, and supplemental outreach to the state and in the corridor for public/private partnerships potential. Funds will also be used to begin work on an Environmental Impact Statement for the corridor. The Chattanooga-Nashville Corridor will be an extension of the Atlanta-Chattanooga corridor creating a seamless corridor between Atlanta and Nashville to address airport capacity issues in the region. Chattanooga's Lovell Field currently has unused capacity for additional enplanements, while Atlanta's Hartsfield-Jackson Airport is overcrowded as the nation's busiest air hub.

High-speed connections between the Atlanta, Chattanooga and Nashville airports are necessary, as recommended by the State of Georgia's Joint Study Committee on Transportation Funding.

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. MICA. Madam Speaker, pursuant to the Republican Leadership standards on earmarks, I am submitting the following information for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD regarding earmarks I received as part of the Energy and Water section of the FY09 Omnibus Appropriations Act, Army Corps of Engineers, General Investigations Account for the Intracoastal Waterway, Jacksonville to Miami, FL.

I have received $4.019 million in the FY09 Omnibus Appropriations Act. The entity to receive funding for this project is Florida Inland Navigation District, 1314 Marcinski Road, Jupiter, FL 33477. The FY 2009 funding will be used for the maintenance dredging of the IWW in portions of the IWW in St. Johns, Duval, St. Lucie, Martin and Indian River Counties.

The Intracoastal Waterway in Florida annually: transports over 1.7 million tons of commercial cargo and over 500,000 recreational vessels; increases property values by $38.4 billion, and; provides $18 billion in economic output which includes $6 billion in personal wages and 203,519 jobs. Studies have shown that these benefits would be reduced by over 50% if the waterway is not properly maintained.

The Mobile Health Unit will serve an estimated 4,000 people per year equaling a taxpayer/hospital savings of $1,980,000 in indigent care costs.

Pursuant to the Republican Leadership standards on earmarks, I am submitting the following information for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD regarding earmarks I received as part of the Labor, HHS, Education section of the FY09 Omnibus Appropriations Act, Department of Health and Human Services, Health Resources and Administration Account for the School of Nursing at the Bethune-Cookman University.

These alternative supplies will reduce the projected regional groundwater deficits. This project will develop up to 30 million gallons per day of additional water supply from the St. Johns River and potentially other alternative water sources.

This funding is needed in order to ensure the availability of an affordable supply of water for use by public water supply and possibly by wastewater utility customers in the Volusia County area, to avoid competition among users of traditional groundwater sources for the limited groundwater supplies in the project area and to reduce the significant threat to water resources and related natural systems that would result if withdrawals of groundwater were allowed to occur beyond their sustainable limits.

Pursuant to the Republican Leadership standards on earmarks, I am submitting the following information for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD regarding earmarks I received as part of the Interior and Environment FY09 Omnibus Appropriations Act, Environmental Protection Agency, STAG Water and Wastewater Infrastructure Account for the Potable Water System Improvement Project, City of Crescent City, Florida.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD regarding earmarks I received as part of the Energy and Water section of the FY09 Omnibus Appropriations Act, Army Corps of Engineers, General Investigations Account for the Flagler Beach Shoreline Protection Project.

I have received $263,000 in the FY09 Omnibus Appropriations Act. The entity to receive funding for this project is Flagler County, 1769 East Moody Blvd, Bunnell, FL 32110. The FY 2009 funding will complete the feasibility study of the Flagler County shoreline which was begun with funding provided in FY 2004.

The shoreline of the City of Flagler Beach has experienced critical erosion that threatens State Road A1A, which serves as an emergency evacuation route. For example, A1A was closed in Flagler Beach for the month of January, 2006 as the road was completely washed away due to erosion. The erosion also has caused a severe loss of public recreation opportunities and a degradation of environmental habitat. The beach is so narrow that the high tide line extends into the existing revetment, making it unsuitable as nesting habitat for sea turtles and almost unusable for recreational purposes. The City believes that restoration of the beach is a primary component of preserving safe passage along A1A while also providing public recreational opportunities and environmental habitat.

Pursuant to the Republican Leadership standards on earmarks, I am submitting the following information for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD regarding earmarks I received as part of the Commerce, Justice, Science section of the FY09 Omnibus Appropriations Act, Department of Justice, OJP-Byrne Discretionary Grants Account for Putnam County for the Children's Advocacy Center.

I have received $330,000 in the FY09 Omnibus Appropriations Act. The entity to receive funding for this project is Putnam County, PO Box 758, Palatka, FL 32178. The FY 2009 funding will assist Putnam County, FL to renovate and equip a new 2500 sq. ft facility to address child abuse cases in this affected area. This new facility will provide children, their families, case workers, detectives and advocates a safe central location where they can meet in a nonthreatening environment. This project has not received federal funding previously, but is authorized under P.L. 109-162—the Edward Byrne Memorial Justice Assistance Grant Program.

The purpose of the Children's Advocacy Center in Putnam County provides an environment for multiple agencies to interview, examine, investigate and treat cases of child abuse in Putnam County. These funds will be used to renovate and staff a new 2500 sq. ft facility. This new facility will provide children, their families, case workers, detectives and advocates a safe central location where they can meet in a non-threatening environment. Providing this space for concurrent interviewing and interagency conferencing enhances the communication between agencies on mutual cases.

Pursuant to the Republican Leadership standards on earmarks, I am submitting the following information for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD regarding earmarks I received as part of the Commerce, Justice, Science section of the FY09 Omnibus Appropriations Act, Department of Justice, COPS Law Enforcement Technology for the City of Maitland. I have received $170,000 in the FY09 Omnibus Appropriations Act. The entity to receive funding for this project is City of Maitland, 1776 Independence Ln, Maitland, FL 32751. The FY 2009 funding will assist the City of Maitland in the purchase of an upgraded computer aided dispatch system that will better coordinate law enforcement and of first responders. This project has not received federal funding previously, but is authorized under P.L. 109-162—the Edward Byrne Memorial Justice Assistance Grant Program.

The funding will form a multi-agency radio interoperability system comprised of the City of Maitland, City of Orlando and the University of Central Florida, and for critical technology upgrades for the Maitland Police and Fire Department. Funding is for Maitland's portion of the multi-agency radio interoperability system. Additionally, the need for timely records, Drivers License, Criminal History, and photo identification information is critical for public safety. Mobile Data Terminals (MDT) provide immediate access to this critical information and funding will allow for their full provision to Police, Public Safety (Fire EMS), and connection to the Public Safety Records Management System (RMS).

Pursuant to the Republican Leadership standards on earmarks, I am submitting the following information for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD regarding earmarks I received as part of the Energy and Water section of the FY09 Omnibus Appropriations Act, Army Corps of Engineers, General Investigations Account for the St. Johns County Shore Erosion Control Project.

I have received $263,000 in the FY09 Omnibus Appropriations Act. The entity to receive funding for this project is St. Johns County, 4020 Lewis Speedway, St. Augustine, FL 32084. The FY 2009 funding will allow the Army Corps of Engineers to lessen down drift shoreline impacts caused by the federal navigation channel at St. Augustine Inlet, and to provide storm damage protection to the shore.

St. Johns County is located on the East Coast of Florida, approximately 30 miles south of Jacksonville and 200 miles north of Miami. The ocean shoreline of St. Johns County is approximately 42 miles long. Due to tropical storms and major hurricanes, particularly Hurricane Floyd of 1999, the shorelines of St. Johns County have been subject to significant erosion prompting a request to the federal government for assistance. The feasibility study area will include all of St. Johns County, including the South Ponte Vedra Beach area.

HON. BRIAN P. BILBRAY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. BILBRAY. Madam Speaker, pursuant to the House Republican standards on earmarks, I am submitting the following information for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD regarding earmarks I received as part of H.R. 1105.

Requesting Member: Congressman BRIAN BILBRAY

Bill Number: H.R. 1105 FY 2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act

Account: CDC, Public Health Improvement and Leadership

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: County of San Diego, Public Health Services

Address of Requesting Entity: 1700 Pacific Highway, San Diego, CA 92101

Description of Request: I received an earmark of $476,000 to implement a management system to allow the County of San Diego to track medications, vaccines, supplies, equipment and people used during a health emergency response. The County is vulnerable and at high risk for such incidents due to its status as a border community and military town. The Emergency Preparedness and Public Health Management System (EPPHMS) will provide real-time visibility in the day-to-day and emergency management of pharmaceuticals, vaccines, consumable and capital assets, materiel and human resources, program management and patient tracking. Many County and local programs and agencies will use this management system concurrently for daily and emergency management in single-site, multi-site or mobile facilities, while integrating with the County's main Emergency Operations Center. This HIPAA- and PHIN-compliant system will mitigate a gap in County readiness and infrastructure, as identified by the Center for Disease Control and Prevention in 2007.

Requesting Member: Congressman BRIAN BILBRAY

Bill Number: H.R. 1105 FY 2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act

Account: Department of Transportation, Federal Highway Administration, Transportation, Community, and System Preservation Program

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: City of Carlsbad, California

Address of Requesting Entity: 1200 Carlsbad Village Drive, Carlsbad, California 92008

Description of Request: I received an earmark of $237,500 to proceed with the design work to construct a replacement for the Encinas Creek Bridge. This is a critical section of the historic route Coast Highway 101 and it is the regional road alternative to Interstate 5. CALTRANS has indicated in two major reviews that this bridge must be replaced as soon as possible to meet seismic standards and repair the failing support structure. Bridge lanes have already been rerouted temporarily for public safety. This stretch of Coast Highway provides direct access to public beach parking, pedestrian access, coastal bicycle trails, state campgrounds, and several tourist serving commercial facilities. Public funding to support this very heavily utilized public road is vital to ensure traffic flow, safety, and the economic development of the region. 20% of funding will come from local or state sources, and this project is part of the State of California's transportation improvement plan and has been identified as an eligible project critical to the region.

Bill Number: H.R. 1105 FY 2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act

Account: COPS Technology

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: County of San Diego, Sheriff's Department

Address of Requesting Entity: 9621 Ridgehaven Court, San Diego, CA 92123

Description of Request: Per my request, San Diego County has received $1.35 million for the ongoing upgrade of the San Diego County Sheriff's Department's Regional Communications System (RCS). This funding will be used for Phase 1 of migration to P25 capacity, which will move the County and its cities forward in the implementation of an effective, efficient regional interoperable communications system. This system will be critical both in terms of daily, routine communications and during disaster emergencies and other events that demand that all public safety agencies be able to communicate effectively. It will benefit California and other States and Federal agencies by providing voice radio interoperability with those entering into the region providing mutual aid. Ultimately, it will enable San Diego County public safety agencies to seamlessly integrate with surrounding Counties as it is built out to a "network of networks."

Requesting Member: Congressman BRIAN BILBRAY

Bill Number: H.R. 1105 FY 2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act

Through this program, high-resolution wave data and forecasts are disseminated in real time via the internet to the National Weather Service and to tens of thousands of diverse users each day. Sea state and surf warnings are issued based on this information for the protection of life and property. In addition, beach elevations are monitored and analyzed, and this information is provided to coastal communities online where local governments and engineers use it for making educated policy decisions for protecting and enhancing local beaches. This request is consistent with the intended and authorized purpose of the Army Corps of Engineers, which has the federal responsibility for shoreline protection and uses this data for coastal dredging and construction projects. This program is critical to marine safety and operations for the coastal United States and there are no competitive funding sources available.

Requesting Member: Congressman BRIAN BILBRAY

Bill Number: H.R. 1105 FY 2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act

The protective beaches throughout the Solana Beach area are severely eroded, leaving residences, portions of Highway 101, and public access points susceptible to dangerous wave attacks and beachgoers subject to falling rocks as bluffs are destabilized by erosion. This Shore Protection Project will build up the protective beaches along the coast, preserving public access, recreational areas, and as well as public infrastructure and private homes.

EARMARK DECLARATION

HON. JERRY MORAN

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. MORAN of Kansas. Madam Speaker, pursuant to the Republican Leadership standards on earmarks, I am submitting the following information for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD regarding earmarks I received as part of H.R. 1105, the Omnibus Appropriations Act, 2009.

Requesting Member: Congressman JERRY MORAN

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Agency/Account: Agricultural Research Service, Salaries and Expenses

Legal Name of Requesting Entities: ARS Manhattan Unit and Kansas State University

Address of Requesting Entities: 1515 College Ave, Room 101, Manhattan, KS 66502 and 110 Anderson Hall, Manhattan, KS 66506

Description of Project: I have secured $508,000 for Karnal Bunt (KB which is a disease of wheat that is caused by the fungus Tilletia indica. Although total deregulation of KB is scientifically justified, international quarantine deregulation is a slow and complex process. Past funded breeding programs have been successful and developed an array of resistant breeding lines. These lines are now in final stages of testing prior to variety release. As Karnal bunt research is completed, we request these h d s be transitioned to address new, more critical disease threats, such as cereal rust diseases. Since 2001, other serious challenges to wheat crop health have emerged, including new virulent races of stripe and leaf rust and the African stem rust race Ug99 and its variants. Resources are needed to address these critical disease issues and vulnerabilities in U.S. cereal production. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Requesting Member: Congressman JERRY MORAN

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Agency/Account: Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, Salaries and Expenses
Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Kansas State University

Address of Requesting Entity: 110 Anderson Hall, Manhattan, KS 66506

Description of Project: I have secured $259,000 for The National Agricultural Biosecurity Center (NABC) at Kansas State University. NABC was established to help protect the U.S. agricultural infrastructure and economy from endemic and emerging biological threats. There has been progress made with Phase I and Phase II funding, but more work is necessary. The NABC requires Phase III continuation funding to implement international linkages for food animal and food crop disease surveillance, to expand animal health diagnostic screening capabilities in Kansas and the region, to further develop a GLS-based tracking system for pathogen monitoring, and to populate a lessons learned agrosecurity archive. To address these national security needs, funding is also required for enhanced Internet connectivity, on-line training materials, and data mining tools. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Requesting Member: Congressman JERRY MORAN

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Agency/Account: Cooperative State Research Education and Extension Service/SRG
Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Kansas State University

Address of Requesting Entity: 110 Anderson Hall, Manhattan, KS, 66506

Description of Project: I have secured $515,000 Great Plains Sorghum Improvement and Utilization Center. Kansas State University along with Texas Tech University and Texas A&M University initiated the Great Plains Sorghum Improvement and Utilization Center (GPSIUC). The focus of the center is on genetic improvement, production systems to enhance water and nutrient use, innovative strategies to provide improved weed control. Utilization of sorghum in human food products, animal feed, and as a bioenergy and industrial feedstock, plus marketing, and policy analysis in support of the US sorghum industry. Increased funding for FY09 will permit GPSIUC to expand existing research and education programs, particularly in genetic improvement and sorghum utilization. Sorghum is one of the most drought tolerant crops in the world, offering many potential advantages as a food, feed and bioenergy crop, and could be a key to sustaining viable rural economies in the Great Plains. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Requesting Member: Congressman JERRY MORAN

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Agency/Account: Cooperative State Research Education and Extension Service/SRG
Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Kansas State University

Address of Requesting Entity: 110 Anderson Hall, Manhattan, KS, 66506

Description of Project: I have secured $142,000 for Preharvest Food Safety and Security program. Currently, Kansas State University has an ongoing USDA special project on the ecology of E. coli 0157:H7 in beef cattle and the environment. This bacterial organism is a major cause of food-borne illnesses in humans. The university plans to expand its investigations into (1) the ecology of Salmonella in beef cattle, (2) antimicrobial resistance in cattle, and (3) agroinformatics and animal health diagnostics. These four areas of research have great overlap and synergy and will allow Kansas State University to better identify emerging threats of food-borne and zoonotic diseases associated with food-producing animals. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Requesting Member: Congressman JERRY MORAN

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Agency/Account: Cooperative State Research Education and Extension Service/SRG
Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Kansas State University

Description of Project: I have secured $69,000 to study water conservation in the Ogallala Region of Kansas. This effort is critical to the economic viability of western Kansas. In many parts of western Kansas, freshwater from both surface and groundwater is increasingly in short supply. Drought, aquifer and surface water depletion, and population shifts have stretched community and regional water supplies to their limits. As groundwater supplies decline or become cost prohibitive, better management of water through conservation, recycling, and treatment of poor quality water for use becomes even more important. The goals of this project are to help: 1) agricultural producers, both crop and livestock; 2) rural communities in water-short areas; and 3) state agencies to implement economical technologies and policies that will result in water conservation and prolonged life of the Ogallala aquifer in the face of increasing competition for declining aquifers and over-allocated surface waters. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Requesting Member: Congressman JERRY MORAN

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Agency/Account: Cooperative State Research Education and Extension Service/SRG
Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Kansas State University

Address of Requesting Entity: 110 Anderson Hall, Manhattan, KS, 66506

Description of Project: I have secured $240,000 for Wheat Genetic Research. Wheat is the world's most important grain for human nutrition, but genomics and biotechnology research has lagged behind. WGGRC is leading an international effort to map and sequence the wheat genome. The WGGRC gene bank currently maintains 12,000 lines and these collections are continuously expanding as the Center acquires, develops, and distributes new genetic and genomic resources to facilitate wheat genetics, genomics, and breeding research. Kansas State University has already made an investment of almost $1.0 million towards the purchase of a DNA sequencer and a robot for arraying and printing of DNA filters. This request will collect, conserve, and distribute wheat genetic and genomic resources; develop improved germ plasm; develop genetic stocks; develop genomic resources; and support training and outreach. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Requesting Member: Congressman JERRY MORAN

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Agency/Account: DOJ, COPS Law Enforcement Technology

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: City of Emporia Police Department

Address of Requesting Entity: 518 Mechanic Street, Emporia, KS 66801

Description of Project: I have secured $150,000 for the City of Emporia Police Department.

The City of Emporia police department has had problems maintaining the pace of the replacement of equipment and staffing critical to the safety of the officers and members of the community. In the development of a five year capital improvement project, there were only four of the nearly 20 items that were new. Funding is requested for the purchase of Communication and Surveillance Equipment. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Requesting Member: Congressman JERRY MORAN

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Agency/Account: DOJ, COPS Law Enforcement Technology

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: City of Garden City Police Department

Address of Requesting Entity: 304 N. 9th Street, Garden City, KS 67846

Description of Project: I have secured $150,000 for the Garden City Police Department. The Garden City Police Department is always looking for ways to be progressive and adding equipment which would help us monitor gang activity and prevent, or resolve graffiti and gang crime is sorely needed. Gang crime and graffiti have become problematic and public expectations for safety and prevention are high. Video monitoring equipment and accompanying computers and software that officers can access in their patrol vehicles would be of immense assistance to the Garden City Police Department for immediate response and intervention, especially in high crime areas. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Requesting Member: Congressman JERRY MORAN

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Agency/Account: DOJ, COPS Law Enforcement Technology

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Junction City Police Department

Address of Requesting Entity: 210 East Ninth Street, Junction City, KS 66441

Description of Project: I have secured $150,000 for the Junction City Police Department. Junction City Police Department is a 52 officer department located in Central Kansas next to Fort Riley military base. The unprecedented growth in the community is experiencing has magnified downfalls in their current technology and has identified the need for additional technology. The Junction City Police Department needs key technology components to merge their systems together making a more user friendly environment accessible to the entire law enforcement team rather than a limited number of educated individuals. Funding would be used to purchase additional technology, such as surveillance enhancements, GIS improvements and crime mapping technology to analyze crime trends and to ensure the proper application of department resources and manpower. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Requesting Member: Congressman JERRY MORAN

Youthville will provide comprehensive training to future foster families across Kansas, preparing them for the challenges of caring for a traumatized child. The Training Institute for Foster and Adoptive Families will recruit and train families interested in foster parenting and adopting at-risk children. These families will be prepared for adopting an at-risk child who has experienced severe emotional, physical, and/or sexual abuse. The Training Institute will consist of staff that is highly trained in helping the families build their skills in managing trauma-based behaviors in children. The families and children themselves will also receive training that is intensive and ongoing. Families who have previously adopted will also be eligible for the Training Institute. The overall goal of the program is to assist these children in becoming productive members of our society by placing them in families prepared to deal with foreseeable challenges. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Agency/Account: Corps of Engineers, Section 205

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: City of Concordia

Address of Requesting Entity: 701 Washington Street, Concordia, KS 66901

Description of Project: I have secured language for the Army Corps of Engineers to provide assistance to The Concordia project which is located on an unnamed tributary on the south side of the City of Concordia. An existing embankment on that stream serves as a detention dam during heavy rainfall events and protects a residential and commercial development immediately downstream. This embankment breached as a result of heavy rainfall in 1950 and flood waters devastated the downtown business district. The embankment was restored, but not designed to current or any acceptable engineering standards, and its condition makes the risk of flooding to the housing and business district immediately downstream very high. The project will develop a plan to construct a safe and reliable flood protection project in partnership with the City of Concordia. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Requesting Member: Congressman JERRY MORAN

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Agency/Account: Department of Energy, EERE

This diverse group of stakeholders will ensure a Center structure that fosters research collaborations, technology transfer, and commercialization.

To address the grand challenges and produce "game-changing" innovations, the CSE will draw upon expertise from five major research-specialty groups: biomass design, biomass production, biomass conversion to fuels and chemicals, biofuel/product utilization, and the socioeconomic impacts of sustainable energy. A critical mass of diverse investigators from academia, industry, and national laboratories plans and carries out broad ranging research that will produce a continuous outflow of sustainable processes for technology transfer, business development, and commercialization. Commercialization activities will include market assessment, policy review and legal issues, intellectual property generation and management, facilitating collaborations and creation of investment vehicles. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Address of Requesting Entity: 110 Anderson Hall, Manhattan, KS, 66506

Description of Project: I have secured $713,625 for the Kansas Wind Energy Consortium. A consortium (KWECC) of researchers from Kansas State University, Wichita State University, and the University of Kansas request funding to dramatically increase the penetration of wind energy via distributed wind power generation. KWECC aims to find technical and economic solutions to enable widespread implementation of distributed renewable energy resources that would apply to wind. The outcome will make Kansas and the nation more energy and environmentally secure. Additionally, with growing emphasis on renewable energy worldwide, success of this research would have global impact. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: The University of Kansas

Address of Requesting Entity: 1450 Jayhawk Boulevard, Room 230, Lawrence, KS 66045

Description of Project: I have secured $100,000 for the KU Center for Trade and Agribusiness. The University of Kansas School of Law is nationally recognized for its international trade and international finance coursework and legal analysis. The proposed center at the University of Kansas School of Law would provide law students and faculty the ability to distribute legal expertise into the field of trade which is crucial to the continued economic success of Kansas and the Great Plains. Agriculture trade makes up the majority of state economies like Kansas and increasing and expediting trade will grow these economies. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Agency/Account: EPA, STAG Water and Wastewater Infrastructure Project

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: City of Lindsborg

Address of Requesting Entity: 101 S. Main P.O. Box 70, Lindsborg, KS 67456

Description of Project: I have secured $500,000 for the City of Lindsborg's wastewater treatment plant upgrade. The City of Lindsborg engaged an engineering consultant in January of 2007 to conduct an assessment of the Lindsborg wastewater treatment plant (WWTP). The three primary drivers for the assessment were safety of the wetwell, the ex-ration of the current NPDES permit in 2009 and the age of the facility. The wetwell receives the raw sewage into the plant for treatment. It is a highly corrosive environment due to sewer gases and the different types of waste that enters. The current wetwell is a safety hazard because it is a confined space with poor ventilation. The regular cleaning of the wetwell is a major safety issue for wastewater treatment plant employees.

The WWTP is regulated by both EPA and the Kansas Department of Health & Environment (KDHE). On September 30, 2009, the NPDES permit for the wastewater treatment plant is up for renewal. As part of the study, a mock permit was requested from the KDHE. The purpose of the mock permit was to determine what the compliance requirements would be for the renewal permit. The results of the mock permit said that any upgrade or expansion must provide for a full reduction of nitrogen by nitrification and denitrification processes. There is also the possibility of more stringent effluent limits for phosphorus that may be applied.

The current recommended upgrades to the WWTP are at an estimated construction cost of $4,534,600. Of this estimated cost, 76% of the cost ($3,446,296) is due to meeting regulatory, code, safety, age and efficiency issues. The remaining costs of improvements ($1,088,304) are due to capacity and biosolids handling needs. These improvements are needed to ensure the safety of employees, rivers/streams and public health. The costs of the upgrades to comply and ensure safety are burdensome on a small community. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Agency/Account: EPA, STAG Water and Wastewater Infrastructure Project

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: City of Salina

Address of Requesting Entity: 300 West Ash St., Salina, KS 67402

Description of Project: I have secured $250,000 for the City of Salina. The City of Salina, together with the Salina Area Chamber of Commerce are working to address a key issue that slows the opportunity for job creation and economic development.

The community is developing an innovative approach to housing development to address workforce development issues and to stimulate job creation and the investment of private sector capital. The shortage of homes in selected price ranges is causing supply/demand inflation that prices many buyers out of the housing market or forces them into much more debt than they should incur.

Funds will be leveraged from both public and private sources to reduce the infrastructure development costs that make it challenging to develop affordable housing. A multi-phase housing subdivision will be built. The first phase will be approximately 100 lots and be sold to the public and/or direct to builders. The homes will be limited in size to ensure construction of homes that are in short supply for current and future employees.

Federal funds for this project will be used for water line extensions and sewer lines and improvements to the new development. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Emporia State University

Address of Requesting Entity: 1200 Commercial Street, Emporia, KS 66801

Description of Project: I have secured $190,000 for Emporia State University. Biosciences capability for instruction and research at Emporia State University (ESU) exists in the departments of biology and chemistry. The Biochemistry and Molecular Biology (BMB) major and the other existing bachelors and master's degree programs in biology and chemistry produce graduates who have contributed and will continue to contribute to the technical workforce necessary for the biosciences initiatives envisioned by the Kansas Economic Growth Act. To meet the current and long-term challenges for a successful Kansas bioscience enterprise, funding is requested to purchase various equipment that would greatly contribute to Emporia State University's Bioscience Department. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Hutchinson Community College

Address of Requesting Entity: 1300 N. Plum Street, Hutchinson, KS 67501

Description of Project: I have secured $238,000 for Hutchinson Community College. In March of 2008 Hutchinson Community College will break ground on an expansion and renovation of its 40-year old science building into a Physical and Biotechnology Science Center. Donations from private donors and state and local public sources will pay for the necessary remodeling and facility expansion. Federal dollars are being requested to equip the building with required safety, communication, and technical equipment and furnishings appropriate to learning environments.

HCC's enrollment in science courses increased 33% over five years, leveling off only due to physical space limitations. Credit hour generation in science courses constitutes 12% of total college hours. During the 2006-2007 academic year, 2,717 students were enrolled in science coursework generating 11,267 credit hours. Approximately 40% of these students are pursuing careers in Allied Health. Other students are preparing for transfer to four-year baccalaureate institutions and more advanced scientific study. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: McPherson Opera House Company

Address of Requesting Entity: 219 South Main Street, McPherson, KS 67460

Description of Project: The McPherson Opera House was built in 1888 and for a number of years was the cultural, entertainment and civic center for McPherson County. The advent of movies, and to a greater extent television, negatively impacted audiences at the Opera House, and the auditorium, which had become a movie house, closed its doors in 1965.

Approximately $3,000,000 has been raised and spent on the building's rehabilitation, which has included the exterior and the west commercial portion of the building. What remains to be done is the renovation of the auditorium and the construction of the Arts Center beneath the auditorium. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Agency/Account: DOT, Transportation, Community, and System Preservation

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Kansas Department of Transportation

Address of Requesting Entity: 700 S.W. Harrison Street, Topeka, KS 66603

Description of Project: I have secured $1,520,000 for county road construction and improvements for US-54. In order to provide adequate access to a new ethanol plant approximately 5 miles northeast of the City of Liberal on US-54, the Kansas Department of Transportation will be constructing a new, paved county road. Access to the existing unpaved county road off US-54 is dangerous as there are no turning lanes on the highway which is a High Priority Corridor and the heaviest traveled highway in the Liberal area. A large number of semi-trucks will be entering and exiting the county road which is expected to cause significant delays on US-54 as well as major safety concerns. In addition to constructing the new county road, improvements will be made with the US-54 intersection. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Description of Project: I have secured $118,750 for the Salina Workforce Housing Project. Funds will be leveraged from both public and private sources to reduce the infrastructure development costs that make it challenging to develop affordable housing. A multi-phase housing subdivision will be built. The first phase will be approximately 100 lots and be sold to the public and/or direct to builders. The homes will be limited in size to ensure construction of homes that are in short supply for current and future employees.

This project will address two housing shortages that impact worker availability and economic development at once. The primary target is to develop homes that are appropriate for households with 110 to 130 percent of median income in Salina. I certify that neither I nor my spouse has any financial interest in this project.

Assistive technology will also be a key dimension of the program for both the employer and employees—used to level the professional and educational playing field for persons with disabilities and enhance long term job performance and stability. This program will be part of a comprehensive worker credentialing program that will incorporate WorkKeys assessments and a standardized curriculum for basic workplace skills. WorkKeys, developed by ACT, is a national system for documenting and improving workplace skills. The program consists of three primary components: Job Profiling, Assessments and instructional support. Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Montgomery Airport Authority

Description of Request: It is my understanding that the funding would be used to preserve valuable airport infrastructure. It consists of rehabilitation of the pavement structure of the airport's primary runway, Runway 10/28, whose condition is beginning to deteriorate. This runway is showing signs of advanced deterioration at this time and will not last beyond another year or two without major rehabilitation. Since airport runways do not receive the level of activity that keeps roadways fresh by constantly flexing the asphalt, they tend to oxidize and crack over a period of 10-12 years. This runway has not been rehabilitated since 1996.

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. RANGEL. Madam Speaker, I rise with great sadness as I pay tribute to my dear friend Jordi Reyes-Montblanc who recently passed away. As I speak with profound sorrow, I ascend to celebrate a life well lived and to remember with fondness the accomplishments of a remarkable man who, over his many years as an outstanding advocate for the West Harlem community, fought strongly and passionately for his ideals regardless of how popular the issue.

Jordi was a larger-than-life figure in the West Harlem community. For decades he was one of the area's most energetic activists, fighting for safe streets and cleaner parks, and especially championing the cause of affordable housing and homeownership for New Yorkers of modest means. Jordi delighted in his many contradictions. He was staunchly proud of his Cuban heritage. He was a fierce opponent of Communism who nonetheless fought for not-so-Capitalistic affordable housing policies.

Jordi's story was the stuff of novels. He fled his native Cuba as a young adult in 1958, escaping the winds of communism that eventually swept the island. He joined the U.S. Marines, where he engaged in covert operations in Southeast Asia. Though, he never spoke much about his past to those outside of his closest circle of friends. He was an avid hunter who often demonstrating his trademark frankness.

Jordi was a pioneer in the movement to allow low- and middle-income families to purchase their own apartments through the city's Housing Development Fund Corporation program, and in 1993 he led the conversion of his own building to a limited-equity co-op.

This activism on housing issues secured his appointment to Community Board 9 in the mid-1990s. It was during that period when he developed a close bond to Councilman Stan Michels, another significant local leader who passed away late last year. As Chair of Community Board 9, Jordi was fearless in speaking his mind on local issues, regardless of who he might offend. That quality could have earned him nothing but detractors on the Board, but instead the reverse happened: he was almost universally respected for his even-handedness and devotion to the community.

Columbia University's plan to expand to a new campus in Manhattanville defined Jordi's tenure as Chair of the local community board. While maintaining that he wasn't opposed to the expansion per se, he became a vocal critic of the displacement of local residents and businesses which would result from the specific plan Columbia was advancing. Jordi thrust his community board into the center of the fight on this issue, and he became a fixture in the city's media as an outspoken critic of the expansion.

In his blog you can still find his thoughts on what he felt he was about. He states, "I don't lead, I don't follow and I do the things my heart and conscience tells me are right for me to do, any one is welcome to stand shoulder-to-shoulder with me freely."

Jordi Reyes-Montblanc will be long remembered for his extraordinary commitment, energy, wisdom, discipline, principle, and clear purpose which won the admiration of all who were privileged to come to know and work with him. I consider myself fortunate to have had the opportunity to observe and experience his example as a personal inspiration.

Madam Speaker, rather than mourn his passing, I hope that my colleagues will join me in celebrating the life of Jordi by remembering that he exemplified greatness in every way.

JUDGE TOM ELLINGTON AND "WE THE PEOPLE"

HON. DAVID G. REICHERT

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. REICHERT. Madam Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Municipal Court Judge Thomas Ellington in Washington State who received the annual William Nevins Award from the Washington Judges' Foundation for working tirelessly to educate youth about the judicial branch of government. Judge Ellington has spent the entirety of his judicial career working on behalf of "We the People," a high school program that competes on the knowledge of the U.S. Constitution and what role students play as citizens.

For more than two decades, dating back to his law school days, Judge Ellington has worked to help students understand how to properly engage in democracy and recognize the Constitution as an incredibly influential historic document.

Not only has Judge Ellington played a 'facilitator' role for the "We the People" program, but he improved it with innovative ideas: instead of heading into individual classrooms, Judge Ellington brought teachers and students in Washington State to him in the form of voluntary workshops. Whether serving as "We the People" advisory board president or simply volunteering his time and knowledge, Judge Ellington employs the heart of a servant.

Such a high and prestigious honor such as the Williams Nevins Award must be awarded to someone in the legal profession who goes above and beyond the call of duty; Judge Thomas Ellington is that person. I want to congratulate for the recognition, thank him for his service to the State of Washington and the Nation and encourage him to continue on his path of leadership and selfless service.

CONGRATULATIONS TO REPRESENTATIVE DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. SMITH of Nebraska. Madam Speaker, I rise today to offer my warmest congratulations to former Representative Doug Bereuter for receiving the 2009 Trailblazer Award from the NEBRASKAland Foundation.

Each year, the NEBRASKAland Foundation celebrates Nebraska's entrance into the union. During this event, the Foundation honors distinguished Nebraskans for the impressive contributions to the State of Nebraska.

I can think of no one who sums up the spirit of this award better than Representative Bereuter. His 26 years in Congress is a testament to his long-standing dedication to all Nebraskans. When I look at everything he accomplished during his tenure here in Congress, I am both humbled and inspired. He has truly set a tremendous example for others.

Once again, I offer my congratulations to Representative Bereuter and I thank him for his public service, his leadership, and his friendship.

RCAP service providers work with federal and state agencies to help small communities address their drinking water and wastewater treatment concerns. While small, rural communities are home to less than 25% of the nation's population, they account for over 85% of the nation's community water systems. Problems with EPA clean water compliance may arise when small communities lack the oversight capacity and technical expertise to deal with the complexities of maintaining a safe and clean supply of water, and communities with fewer than 10,000 residents are more than twice as likely to violate drinking water standards as are larger systems. Each year, the RCAP network delivers services to more than 2,000 rural communities, 90% of which have populations of 2,500 or fewer, while leveraging an average of $25 in additional funding for every $1 in federal investment. FY09 funding will be equally divided between technical assistance activities related to drinking water and clean water compliance.

Project Name: Mid-West/Mid-South Irrigation, Columbia, MO

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Agricultural Research Service; Salaries and Expenses

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Curators of the University of Missouri

Address of Requesting Entity: 316 University Hall, Columbia, MO 65211

Description of Request: Provide an earmark of $645,000 to conduct research on irrigation in the Midwest/Mid-South (Mw/MS), the region experiencing the highest increase in irrigated acreage in the USA. Irrigation research had traditionally been done in dry parts of the country. However, results from these arid studies from areas where it is continuously dry are not always appropriate to the Mw/MS conditions, which can experience droughty periods followed by heavy rains, has hard pan soils, and disease pressure from high humidity. Since the Mw/MS is a historically underserved area in regards irrigation research, its farmers were not as able to grow irrigated crops as profitably as they could. It is imperative that research be conducted to answer the question of how best to irrigate in a semi-humid area. Research is being done on crop response to water logging, on scheduling irrigation using sensors, on row configurations, on conserving energy, on managing field variability, and growing rice more profitably. The project is a cooperative effort between USDA/ARS and the University of Missouri. Approximately, 80% is for salary and benefits, 12% for supplies, 7% for domestic travel, and 1% for soil and plant tissue testing. The data gathered from these studies have already made a difference in the financial situation of area farmers. Approximately 20% of the irrigators are using scientific irrigation scheduling, which is a much higher rate than most other regions of the USA. This has led to increases in yield that are worth about $13,000,000 annually. The trend line of the regional averaged yield for irrigated crops is increasing at a higher rate than is the trend line for dryland yields. This is an excellent indication that irrigators are becoming more proficient, due in large part to the Midwest/Mid-South Irrigation Project.

Approximately, $139,200 [or 80%] is for salaries and $34,800 [or 20%] is for supplies. The specific objective of the MU Rice Project is to develop production practices adapted to the Upper Mississippi Delta to maximize yield while protecting the environment. The project is being administered through the Delta Center by University of Missouri—Extension.

HONORING LEE RHYANT

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Madam Speaker, in celebration of Black History Month, I want to continue recognizing African Americans from throughout Georgia's 11th Congressional District who have a major impact on their community.

Today, I rise to honor Lee Rhyant of Marietta, Georgia. For the past nine years, Lee has served as the Vice President and Site Manager for one of Marietta's most important and largest employers—Lockheed Martin. During his tenure at Lockheed, the company has continued to prosper—providing thousands of jobs for 11th District residents.

In addition to his success in the business world, we should all strive to emulate Lee Rhyant's thirst for education and learning. Lee holds a Bachelor of Science Degree from Bethune-Cookman College, an MBA from Indiana University, and has attended London School of Business, MIT, Harvard, General Motors Institute, and the University of Michigan.

Lee and his wife, Evelyn Ingram Rhyant, have raised two wonderful sons—twins actually—who have followed their parent's example of hard work and have both become fine physicians.

Given his involvement in the business community of Cobb County and his active role as a wonderful father and family man, it is hard to believe that Lee has much time to devote to anything else.

However, despite his busy schedule, I could stand here on the House Floor for hours listing the different organizations to which Lee generously donates his time—including the United Way of Cobb County, the Atlanta Area Boy Scouts Council, the Board of Directors of Bethune-Cookman College, and the Safe America Foundation to name a few. Lee Rhyant is truly community service personified.

I ask that my colleagues join me in commending Lee Rhyant for his hard work and dedication to improving the lives of the people of his community.

HONORING THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA STUDENTS WHO PARTICIPATED IN THE "WE THE PEOPLE" MIDDLE SCHOOL SHOWCASE COMPETITION

HON. ELEANOR HOLMES NORTON

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Ms. NORTON. Madam Speaker, I rise to ask the House to join me in congratulating the remarkable students from The SEED Public Charter School and DC Preparatory Academy. Students from these schools participated in We the People: The Citizen and the Constitution Middle School Showcase on January 7, 2009 for the District of Columbia at the Charles Sumner School Museum and Archives and demonstrated a remarkable understanding of the fundamental principles of our nation.

The students participated in a simulated congressional hearing where they responded to questions on the U.S. Constitution and Bill of Rights from a panel of adult judges. They responded to questions about English philosopher John Locke's view of the purposes of government, the principles embedded in the Declaration of Independence, the compromises made at the Philadelphia Convention, how the Constitution protects our most basic rights, and rights and responsibilities of citizenship.

The We the People: The Citizen and the Constitution is administered by the Center for Civic Education and funded by the U.S. Department of Education under the Education for Democracy Act approved by the U.S. Congress. It is one of the best programs in the nation to promote a deep understanding of the U.S. Constitution, the Bill of Rights, and the principles they embody.

I would also like to congratulate teachers LaTonya Davis at DC Preparatory Academy and Ian Milne at The SEED Public Charter School who did an exceptional job preparing these young students. I also wish to commend Justin Rydstrom, the state coordinator for the We the People program in the District of Columbia. Special recognition should be given to the National Capital Lawyer's Auxiliary who provided volunteers to make the event a success.

Madam Speaker, I am pleased to submit the names of these young "constitutional experts" for special recognition by our colleagues in the House of Representatives and wish them the best of luck as they develop into the future leaders of our nation.

HON. JOSÉ E. SERRANO

OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. SERRANO. Madam Speaker, as our nation celebrates Black History Month and its theme "The Quest for Black Citizenship in the Americas," it is with great pleasure that I rise to honor Dr. Neville A. Parker, Ph.D., an African-American who has devoted himself to the advancement of science and to broadening the participation of under-represented minorities in the fields of mathematics, technology and engineering. Dr. Parker enjoys a distinguished career in international transportation and has demonstrated an unwavering commitment to professionals in developing countries.

Dr. Parker's academic training in engineering began in 1965, when he received a B.E. in Civil Engineering from the City University of New York. He later received an M.E. in Transportation Engineering and a Ph.D. in Systems Engineering from Cornell University in 1966 and 1971, respectively. Dr. Parker is a Registered Professional Engineer in both the United States and the United Republic of Tanzania.

After receiving his Ph.D., Dr. Parker began his illustrious professional career by teaching Civil Engineering at Howard University. He remained in this post until 1979, the last three years of which he spent at the University of Dar Es Salaam in Tanzania as a Senior Fulbright Scholar. Dr. Parker's talents and leadership were immediately recognized, and soon after arriving he became the Head of the Department of Civil Engineering. Dr. Parker's work on engineering capacity building in Tanzania and East and South Africa began with the delivery of a keynote address at the Sixth Pan-African Conference in 1974. Over the subsequent twelve years, Dr. Parker founded and coordinated several highly regarded professional associations, and authored policy documents, studies, and proposals that drew much needed funding to Africa and transformed the field.

In 1989, Dr. Parker returned to the City College of New York as the Herbert G. Kayser Professor of Civil Engineering and the Director of the City University of New York (CUNY) Institute for Transportation Systems. In this capacity, Dr. Parker set the bar for innovative work with professionals in developing countries through the implementation of training programs and collaborations. From 1987 to 1998, Dr. Parker served as Chief Coordinator for the International Road Federation's annual Executive Conferences on Road Asset Management, attracting over three hundred executive level transportation professionals from more than sixty countries across the globe.

Dr. Parker is widely published in international journals and is the co-author of a foundational textbook on highway engineering challenges in Africa. His multiple leadership roles in national and international professional associations are a testament to the respect that so many of Dr. Parker's peers have for him.

Notwithstanding a demanding travel and research schedule, Dr. Parker has retained a steadfast commitment to the education of CUNY students. His transportation infrastructure management courses and supervision of Masters projects and doctoral dissertations are creating a new generation of scholars and practitioners that, following in Dr. Parker's footsteps, will make their own unique contributions for the betterment of our society. Throughout his professional career, Dr. Parker has worked tirelessly to increase minority participation in the sciences. He was Project Director of the Research Careers for Minority Scholars program at City College from 1989–1997 and is the current Director of the New York City Louis Stokes Alliance for Minority Participation program.

Dr. Parker has admirably extended his expertise, resources, and commitment to a myriad of efforts to improve his local Harlem community. A vital member of the Manhattan Borough President Office's Go Green East Harlem Steering Committee, Dr. Parker is currently developing a simulation model to evaluate the public health impacts of transportation, particularly truck and bus operations, in a larger effort to improve air quality. He previously served as the Co-Chair of the Transportation and Economic Development Committee for the Empowerment Zone application, and is recognized for his research on public empowerment in transportation decision-making processes.

Well-respected among his peers, Dr. Parker has received numerous awards including: the Black Engineer of the Year—Outstanding Educator Award (1994); the Giant in Science Award (1996); and the Outstanding Achievement in Education Award (2003). He was recognized in 2006 as one of the top 25 African Americans in education, science and medicine by New York's Who's Who.

Madam Speaker, Dr. Parker is a role model and an inspiration to us all. His passion for the progress of science and his commitment to expanding opportunities in this field to under-represented communities is commendable. I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring Dr. Neville A. Parker.

SHARING THE CARIBBEAN'S APPRECIATION FOR PRESIDENT OBAMA'S INAUGURATION

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. RANGEL. Madam Speaker, I rise today to share the optimism of the Caribbean people in response to the historic inauguration of Barack Obama on January 20th, 2009. The New York CARIB News has deemed the 44th presidency "a watershed, a significant departure from where we once were as a nation." What a great feeling it is to know that when Mr. Obama put his hand on the Bible used by Lincoln to vow to uphold the nation's constitution, it was well received by people of the Caribbean and around the world. I share the sentiment expressed by the reporters of New York CARIB that it was a moment to savor. A news article in the publication titled, "U.S./Caribbean-Relations: On the Verge of a new Chapter in America and World History," makes the case.

[From the New York CARIB News, Jan. 20, 2009]

ON THE VERGE OF A NEW CHAPTER IN AMERICA AND WORLD HISTORY

As a soldier in the civil rights movement of almost half a century ago, a person on the front line of the battle for equality has lived through and has helped to break down the barriers that have opened the flood gates to next week's historic event.

Naturally, John Lewis, a Congressman from Georgia and a sharecropper's son who shared the stage of the "March on Washington" in 1963 with Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., quite clearly understands the monumental significance of the official swearing in Washington on January 20th, the inauguration of Barack Hussein Obama as the 44th President of the United States and the nation's first Black Commander-in-Chief. It has been a long time in coming. The road to the inauguration was soaked in the blood, sweat, and tears of millions, both Black and white, who like John Lewis, Marcus Garvey, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., Malcolm X, Roger Wilkins, and a long list of thousands of major iconic figures in American history, had a vision of what was possible in a country in which race was at the core of public policy.

"Without the Emancipation Proclamation, the sit-ins, the Freedom Rides, the march on Washington, there may not be a Barack Obama," was the way John Lewis summed up the set of building blocks, which have placed us on the cusp of a new chapter in America's history. It signals the promise of more than a new way of thinking but a fresh and inclusive approach to decision-making in a nation whose influence affects almost every corner of the globe.

"It's the pinnacle," said Roger Wilkins, a former university history professor in Washington, as he reflected on the impact of Obama's November 4th victory at the polls. It stands to reason, therefore, that as we look forward to Tuesday's momentous step we cast our minds back to the days when in 1857 the U.S. Supreme Court in the landmark Dred Scott case decided that Blacks "had no rights which any white man was bound to respect." Next, it took President Abraham Lincoln to issue the Emancipation Proclamation on January 1, 1863 to free all slaves in Confederate States.

Just in case, you think we are delving into ancient history to prove a point, just remember that it was about 50 years ago, George Wallace, Alabama's most notorious segregationist Governor, vowed "segregation today . . . segregation forever."

Less than 20 years before that, African American servicemen and women defended this country during the Second World War fighting or serving in segregated units. Who could have imaged back then that we would have lived to see the day when Colin Powell, a Black man with Caribbean family roots, would in less than 40 years, become the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of State and much later the U.S. Secretary of State.

And it was during Obama's lifetime, when he was two years old that the Civil Rights Act of 1964 became the law of the land, officially removing the stain of racial prejudice from our lives. It would take decades and scores of legal tests at the highest levels of our state and federal judicial systems to ensure that the Act was accepted by most Americans.

Small wonder, then, that President Bill Clinton once described racism as "America's curse."

That's why when Chief Justice Roberts administers the presidential oath of office and Obama puts his hand on the Bible once used by Lincoln to vow to uphold the nation's constitution that people everywhere, not simply in the 50 states and in the U.S. territories would fully appreciate how far we have traveled and where the country is heading.

But his mere presence in the White House wouldn't be enough to make the nation what we hope and dreamed it would be: a place where all persons would be judged on their merits and not on the color of their skins.

Undeniably, America is not the same. Obama's election and his inauguration are like a watershed, a significant departure from where we once were as a nation. As a matter of fact, he couldn't have captured the presidency without the support of four of every 10 white voters who cast their ballots for him, alongside the 95 per cent of Blacks and the more than 60 per cent of Hispanics.

On Tuesday, people of all ethnic groups, sizes and shapes, not only in the United States but around the world will savor the moment and thank God, Allah, Jesus, you name the supreme being, that they have lived long enough to see it.

It's a feeling like no other.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 25, 2009

Mr. FORBES. Madam Speaker, consistent with Republican earmark standards, the following are detailed finance plans for each of my requested projects in H.R. 1105, the Omnibus Appropriations Act, 2009:

Requesting Member: Congressman J. RANDY FORBES

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

In 2006, the Suffolk City Council appointed a task force of over 30 representatives of city agencies, local law enforcement, youth service providers, business leaders, faith-based organizations, teachers, parents, and youth to develop recommendations for developing positive alternatives to crime for Suffolk's youth. Among the recommendations is the creation of an Office on Youth, youth workforce development initiatives, new afterschool programs, and gang prevention awareness.

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: City of Chesapeake, Virginia

Description of Request: Provides $100,000 for a Gang Coordinator within the Police Department and community prosecutor program to develop a comprehensive prevention, suppression and intervention strategies related to gangs and gang-related crimes. The City's law enforcement efforts need to be supplemented with front and back-end deterrence efforts. The Chesapeake Police Department estimates in 2006 that there were 26 identified gangs in Chesapeake, with an estimated 2,000 members. This number represents a significant increase from 15 identified gangs with 1,300 estimated members in 2005. In recent years, there has been an observed increase in the presence of all-female and Hispanic gangs, with four of each now identified. The Police Department's Intelligence Unit has identified numerous major gangs and their affiliates operating throughout all five precincts within the City. In response to the identification of major gang activity, in May 2006 the Mayor and City Council appointed the Mayor's Task Force for the Prevention of Gangs. The Task Force is comprised of community leaders representing major stakeholder organizations.

Requesting Member: Congressman J. RANDY FORBES

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Energy and Water, Operations and Maintenance

Address of Requesting Entity: 306 Cedar Road, Chesapeake, Virginia 23322

Description of Request: Supports $1,692,000 in the President's budget request for the Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal (ACC), on the Atlantic Intracoastal Waterway, which is a naturally protected navigation route between the Southern Branch of the Elizabeth River and the VA-NC state line in the North Landing River, a distance of 27 miles. The ACC is of critical importance to transportation, especially to the U.S. Navy which transported over 55 million gallons of jet fuel yearly from the Craney Island to Oceana Naval Air Station in Virginia Beach. Failure to fund the ACC will result in the Navy being unable to meet the fuel demand of the Oceana Naval Station. The Navy has stated that trucking this much fuel would not be feasible on a long-term basis. In addition, commercial and recreation vessels travel the ACC in lieu of the Atlantic Ocean to prevent entry into the dangerous waters off Cape Hatteras. An average of over 1,000,000 tons of commerce passed through the Great Bridge Lock yearly. Funds will be used to continue to operate the navigation lock, swing bridge, and canal.

Requesting Member: Congressman J. RANDY FORBES

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Energy and Water, Operations and Maintenance

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Petersburg, Virginia

Address of Requesting Entity: Petersburg, Virginia

Description of Request Provides $527,000 for the Army Corps of Engineers to dredge the Appomattox River to restore the River's navigability. The dredging of the Navigation Channel will be of benefit to the region in that it will: (1) restore the Appomattox River to the free-flowing, fully navigable river that it was until the late 1970's; (2) reconnect the City's harbor to the navigable portions of the Appomattox River; (3) serve as a catalyst for the commercial and residential revitalization of historic downtown Petersburg; (4) enhance local and regional tourism and recreational opportunities; and (5) improve the environmental condition of the Appomattox River.

Requesting Member: Congressman J. RANDY FORBES

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Energy and Water, Investigations
Legal Name of Requesting Entity: City of Chesapeake, Virginia

Address of Requesting Entity: 306 Cedar Road, Chesapeake, Virginia 23322

Description of Request: Provides $59,000 for the Dismal Swamp and Dismal Swamp Canal. The remnants of Hurricane Floyd (13 September 1999) caused significant flooding in the city of Chesapeake and the surrounding region. The Dismal Swamp is maintained as a swamp by fixed weirs across the drainage ditches to restrict the flow of water out of the swamp and inward to Lake Drummond in the middle of the Dismal Swamp. The water exiting Lake Drummond through a feeder ditch is used to maintain the level of water in the Dismal Swamp Canal, a portion of the Atlantic Intracoastal Waterway. When Lake Drummond spilled from its banks due to heavy rains, it inundated areas of the City. The public perceives that the Corps may have prevented or minimized the flooding by diverting the floodwaters from Lake Drummond through the navigation locks at Deep Creek, Virginia, and at South Mills, North Carolina. The feasibility study will address these concerns as well as opportunities to provide for environmental restoration.

Requesting Member: Congressman J. RANDY FORBES

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Energy and Water, Investigations
Legal Name of Requesting Entity: City of Chesapeake, Virginia

Address of Requesting Entity: 306 Cedar Road, Chesapeake, Virginia 23322

Description of Request: Provides $478,000 for the Atlantic Intracoastal Waterway Bridge at Deep Creek, Virginia. The bridge, constructed in 1934, is a federally owned and operated facility and assists in navigation. The bridge passes over the Dismal Swamp Canal where U.S. Route 17 crosses in the city of Chesapeake. The city of Chesapeake requested the need to modify or replace the bridge. In October 1996, the approved Initial Appraisal concluded that the bridge is functionally obsolete because of its narrow roadway and poor alignment with the connecting roads, compounded by increasing traffic volumes. Nine pieces of fire apparatus are currently allowed to cross the bridge only during emergency situations. The preliminary plan is to replace the bridge with a five lane, split leaf pit bascule bridge. The City of Chesapeake (local sponsor) will assume ownership and OM&R responsibilities of the new bridge.

Requesting Member: Congressman J. RANDY FORBES

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Energy and Water, Investigations
Legal Name of Requesting Entity: City of Franklin, Virginia

Address of Requesting Entity: City of Franklin, Virginia

Description of Request: Provides $96,000 for the Chowan River Basin. There are no federal flood control projects in the Chowan River Basin. In many locations within the basin, six of the top 10 historical high water marks have occurred from 1998 forward, including the flood of record (Hurricane Floyd in 1999), October 2006 cold core upper level low (second highest), and Hurricane Isabel in 2003 (5th highest). Damages from these storm events have ranged from $10M to over $100M (February 2008 dollars). The reconnaissance study will evaluate the Federal interest in ways to protect the water resources of this highly productive basin with particular emphasis on restoring wetlands and forested buffers lost from erosion and flooding, reducing flood damages throughout the basin, and improving navigation and to determine the Federal interest in conducting a more detailed feasibility study.

Requesting Member: Congressman J. RANDY FORBES

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Energy and Water, Operations and Maintenance

Address of Requesting Entity: 306 Cedar Road, Chesapeake, Virginia 23322

Description of Request: Provides $898,000 to support the President's budget request for the Dismal Swamp Canal. The Dismal Swamp Canal on the Atlantic Intracoastal Waterway is a naturally protected navigation route that parallels the Atlantic coast. The canal is the oldest operating artificial waterway in the United States. The DSC was placed on the National Register of Historical Places and registered as an ASCE Landmark in 1988 and in 2004 it was included in the National Park Service's Underground Railroad Network to Freedom Program. The authorized depth of the canal is 10 foot; however, the project is currently maintained at 6–7 feet. The DSC provides navigation needs for vessels to travel the protected waterways of the AIWW in lieu of traveling through the Currituck Sound. The project also consists of one highway drawbridge and navigation lock, one highway drawbridge and navigation lock, and three water control structures. Funds will be used to continue to operate the low level water control structures, navigation locks, bridges, and canal and perform some critical backlog maintenance.

Requesting Member: Congressman J. RANDY FORBES

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Energy and Water, Investigations

Description of Request: Provides $93,000 to support the President's budget request for the Elizabeth River. The study area encompasses the entire Elizabeth River Basin. Urban, rural, industrial, and residential areas blend together along the Elizabeth River and its branches. More than 13,000 vessels use the Elizabeth River annually, many while navigating the Atlantic Intracoastal Waterway. Three hundred years of industry and commerce have made the river one of the nation's most contaminated waterways. Only limited wetlands in the 20-mile reach remain to support wildlife and filter pollution. This sub-estuary of the Chesapeake Bay provides spawning grounds for fish, habitat for rare terns, peregrine falcons and great egrets, and mud flats for shellfish. In 1993 the Chesapeake Bay Program identified the Elizabeth River as a "Region of Concern"—targeting it as one of three sites in the Bay watershed where contaminants pose the greatest threat to natural resources. Phase I consists of the sediment remediation for the Scuffletown Creek site.

Requesting Member: Congressman J. RANDY FORBES

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Interior & Environment, National Park Service, Save America's Treasures

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: City of Petersburg, Virginia

Address of Requesting Entity: 135 N. Union Street, Room 202, Petersburg, Virginia 23803

Description of Request: Provides $150,000 for the rehabilitation, stabilization and preservation of the former home of Colonel John Banister, member of the Continental Congress and framer of the Articles of the Confederation, for future use as a museum and historical tour site. Constructed in 1768 as the suburban villa of Col. Banister, Battersea has been recognized as nationally significant by the Department of the Interior, National Register of Historic Places. The City of Petersburg purchased the house with nearly 40 acres surrounding it in 1985 in order to preserve the structure because of nationally important architectural significance, and will use funds to perform conservation analysis and immediate conservation treatment for water penetration in the foundation of the building.

Requesting Member: Congressman J. RANDY FORBES

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Labor, HHS, Education, Department of Health & Human Services, Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA)—Mental Health

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: Chesterfield County, Virginia

Address of Requesting Entity: 9901 Lori Road, Chesterfield, Virginia 23832

Description of Request: Provides $143,000 for a Dual Treatment Track (DTT), a pretrial diversion program for non-violent defendants that suffer from both a mental illness and substance abuse addiction. Funding would assist in expanding the population served and conducting a comprehensive analysis of the program in order to establish a research based practice that can be replicated across the nation. The program uses "best practices" models to divert individuals from the local jail who are of minimal threat to the community, yet in serious need of both substance abuse and mental health services. The DTT program provides benefits for everyone involved in the criminal justice and mental health systems. It reduces the burden of specialized care that the jail is forced to provide. It gives the court a new tool in dealing with a population that is traditionally difficult to effectively sentence. This program enhances the quality of life in Chesterfield County by creating more accountability and effective service delivery for the specific population of dually diagnosed individuals who criminally offend. Most importantly, it creates change in the lives of the offenders and their families, as they lead more productive, healthy and responsible lives.

Requesting Member: Congressman J. RANDY FORBES

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Transportation, HUD, Federal Highway Administration (FHWA), TCSP—Transportation & Community & System Preservation

Legal Name of Requesting Entity: U.S. Army

Address of Requesting Entity: Fort Lee, Virginia

Description of Request: Provides $1,425,000 for an Entry Access Control project to construct standard design permanent access control facilities at Lee Avenue Gate and Sisisky Boulevard Gate, two primary entrance points into the cantonment area. The existing Access Control Points do not meet Army standards. Due to the increased incidents of terrorist activities it has become imperative that this installation have the ability to close the post to unauthorized traffic. Fort Lee has six Access Control Points. Installations' Access Control Points must be upgraded with facilities and equipment necessary to achieve appropriate levels of security enhancements and risk reductions.

Requesting Member: Congressman J. RANDY FORBES

Address of Requesting Entity: 306 Cedar Road, Chesapeake, Virginia 23322

Description of Request: Provides $237,500 for the Gilmerton Bridge, which serves as the crossing of the Southern Branch of the Elizabeth River for U.S. Route 13/Military Highway. The Gilmerton Bridge is a narrow, four-lane bridge designed to accommodate 15,000 vehicles per day. The Gilmerton Bridge currently handles approximately 30,000 vehicles per day—twice its design capacity. The existing bridge has exceeded the expected design life and is now functionally obsolete. Due to structural deterioration, weight restrictions for heavy truck and commercial traffic have been imposed. With the anticipated growth in this area, it is projected that the traffic volume will increase to approximately 41,000 vehicles per day by the year 2021. Funding would be used to construct a new four-lane bridge with 12' shoulders that can be converted to additional travel lanes in the future.

Requesting Member: Congressman J. RANDY FORBES

Bill Number: H.R. 1105

Account: Transportation

Address of Requesting Entity: 9901 Lori Road, Chesterfield, Virginia 23832

Description of Request: Provides $475,000 for a project involving construction of an interchange on I-295 at the intersection of Meadowville Road. The area surrounding Rt. 10/I-295 is growing into a large industrial hub for the region, and the interchange will provide necessary access to accommodate freight access into and out of the area. The project is included in the Richmond Region MPO's Long Range Transportation Plan.

This project would replace the existing two-lane drawbridge over the Atlantic Intracoastal Waterway with a high rise, fixed span bridge, and would also widen the existing road section to four lanes. The roadway is also part of the National Highway System and is included in Virginia Department of Transportation Six-Year plan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Today's opening prayer will be offered by guest Chaplain Rev. Dr. Charles W. Starks, district superintendent of the Wytheville, VA, district of the United Methodist Church.

The guest Chaplain offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

As we pray, we remember the wisdom of Proverbs 24:10, "If you falter in times of adversity, your strength is too small."

O loving and eternal God, we are humbled and grateful for the privilege of gathering here in Your presence. We lift up to You our President, Barack Obama, and Vice President, JOE BIDEN. We lift to you, O God, each elected, appointed, and employed public servant at each level of government across these United States.

And this day, O God, we particularly intercede on behalf of the women and men of this Senate. We pray for these Senators to stand in unity of purpose, like great and sturdy trees in the face of the swirling and perilous storms of this day. We ask for the roots of their strength, courage, and wisdom to be nourished in Your abundant grace, even the grace of Jesus, who reminds us to treat others in the same manner we desire to be treated. From that rich grace, O God, allow these Senators the privilege of bearing good fruit which will be a blessing to the people of this great land and Your entire good Earth.

O God, we lift this prayer to You, our Creator, Redeemer, and Sustainer who loves us this day and for all times. Amen.

A bill (S. 482) to require Senate candidates to file designations, statements, and reports in electronic form.

A bill (H.R. 1105) making omnibus appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2009, and for other purposes.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I would object to any further proceedings with respect to these bills en bloc.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard. The bills will be placed on the calendar.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA HOUSE VOTING RIGHTS ACT OF 2009

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume consideration of S. 160, which the clerk will report by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 160) to provide the District of Columbia a voting seat and the State of Utah an additional seat in the House of Representatives.

Pending:

Coburn amendment No. 576 (to amendment No. 575), of a perfecting nature.

Thune amendment No. 579, to amend chapter 44 of title 18, U.S. Code, to allow citizens who have concealed carry permits from the State or the District of Columbia in which they reside to carry concealed firearms in another State or the District of Columbia that grants concealed carry permits, if the individual complies with the laws of the State or the District of Columbia.

Kyl amendment No. 585, to provide for the retrocession of the District of Columbia to the State of Maryland.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the time until 10:30 will be equally divided and controlled between the Senator from Arizona, Mr. KYL, and the Senator from Connecticut, Mr. LIEBERMAN, or their designees.

The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, under the previous order, the Senate will now move to the Kyl amendment, I believe, on retrocession, not to be confused with retrogression, although there may be some similarity between the two.

I am looking at the Senator from Maryland, who will rise to the defense in a moment.

As my colleagues know, last night the majority leader filed a cloture motion on this bill, S. 160, the District of Columbia House Voting Rights Act. We made some progress yesterday. There are a few amendments still pending. Obviously, it is our hope that we will be able to complete the bill today and hopefully not have to go to the cloture vote. But that depends on our colleagues.

So I would yield on the pending Kyl amendment to the distinguished Senator from Maryland.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland.

AMENDMENT NO. 585

Mr. CARDIN. I thank my friend from Connecticut for his leadership on this issue. Let me tell my colleagues, I think this is a major human rights issue. I have the opportunity of representing this body as the chairman of the Helsinki Commission. The Helsinki Commission deals internationally with issues of human rights. It is interesting that the United States has taken the leadership on protecting the rights of individuals to vote and to be able to determine their own government. So we have invested a lot of resources in the Helsinki Commission to protect steps to monitor elections around Europe and central Asia and to fight for minority communities to have the right to vote and to have open and honest voting.

Let me tell you, last year there was a resolution filed in our Parliamentary Assembly of the CSCE to encourage America to give the people of the District of Columbia the right to vote. The international community understands that we are out of compliance with basic international norms on giving our citizens the right to participate in their parliament.

So I look at this bill first as a basic right, that every American should be able to have their voice heard here in the Congress of the United States. I support this bill because it moves us in the right direction. But I must tell you, I believe the people of the District should have two Members of this body, two U.S. Senators, and a voting Member of Congress, and I know we tried to do that in the 1970s with a constitutional amendment. I was proud at that time to be a State legislator in Maryland as speaker of the Maryland House. We passed and ratified that constitutional amendment because we thought it was the right thing for the District to have full representation in this body and to have a voting representative in the House of Representatives.

So this legislation, as I said, moves in the right direction. It gives the people of the District a voting Representative in the House of Representatives. That, we should do. And then it even goes further, recognizing the political sensitivity of having another Congressman who may represent one political party. Since the District registration is heavily Democratic, the compromise is to give another Representative to the State of Utah because they are the closest to having been able to obtain another Representative and the registration in Utah is heavily Republican. So it balances it from a political point of view. I understand that is how the system works here. I think this is a fair compromise. What I do not understand is why we are getting all of these other amendments on this bill as an effort to try to kill the underlying bill. Let's have an up-or-down vote on it.

The people of the District have been waiting a long time. I think it is the right thing for us to do to say: Let's give them a vote. Let's get rid of these amendments because these amendments are not aimed at trying to solve the problem, they are aimed at trying to defeat the bill, which brings me to the amendment offered by Senator KYL that is currently pending.

I find this amendment somewhat surprising. Let me tell you why. It would cede the District back to the State of Maryland. It would change the border of my State that I represent in this body. Now, I would have thought—maybe I am naive about this—that if a Senator was introducing an amendment which would change the border of a particular State, that he would talk to the Senators from that State, he would talk to the Governor from that State, he would try to work with the Representatives from that State because if this amendment were adopted, it would affect every single person in Maryland. Our formulas for aid to our counties and Baltimore City are based upon population. If all of a sudden Maryland grows by a couple hundred thousand people, it affects the way our counties operate essential services. Yet there was no effort made by the author of this amendment to consult with the political leadership of my State.

I do not know how another Senator would feel if I introduced an amendment—and I am glad to see Senator KYL has returned to the floor. I don't know how Senator KYL would feel if I introduced an amendment that said, perhaps, Arizona's borders should change a little bit because it makes more sense to do it that way, and there is no need to talk to the Senators from Arizona about it or the government of Arizona, we are just going to do it. I do not think that is the right thing to do.

So I am somewhat puzzled. I must tell you, to me, it is a matter of an unfunded mandate on my State. It is a matter of what federalism is about. It is a matter of States rights, and it is a matter of common decency.

Now, I read the amendment coming over, and I am not sure how these lines were drawn, but I would have thought, if Maryland were to get the District, we would at least get the Kennedy Center. But it looks as if they took the Kennedy Center out, for reasons I cannot explain. I do not know how these lines were drawn. So perhaps my friend will help me understand this better and understand whether the courtesies of the Senate mean you can put legislation in affecting the borders of one State or another without even having the courtesy to talk to the Members of that State.

I can tell you that Maryland very much works very closely with the Mayor of Washington and the people of the District. We have a wonderful regional governmental organization. We work cooperatively on providing services to the people of this region. We have an excellent relationship. We support giving the people of the District representation in Congress because it is the right thing to do, and we want them to have their own Representatives here. We think it is a wrong suggestion to now say: Oh, we can solve this problem by changing the borders of the State of Maryland for that.

I urge my colleagues to reject the KYL amendment and let us get on with passing this very important bill for Americans who have been denied a voice in the Congress of the United States.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona is recognized.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, if the Senator from Maryland has a moment, I would be very happy to respond to some of the concerns he raised. They are all legitimate questions, I acknowledge up front. No State should have territory foisted upon it. That is absolutely true. And the questions raised here were good questions.

First of all, the amendment before us is an amendment that has frequently been offered in the House of Representatives. It has been vetted over there for a long time. So this is not something new.

Secondly, it is absolutely clear from section 6 of the amendment that nothing happens with regard to retrocession unless the State of Maryland agrees. The effectiveness provision reads as follows:

Not later than 30 days after the State of Maryland enacts legislation accepting the retrocession described in section 1(a), the President shall issue a proclamation announcing such acceptance.

Unless the State of Maryland affirmatively, through an act of the people's representatives of that State, vote to do this, there is no retrocession to the State of Maryland.

That answers the question of States rights.

Mr. CARDIN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KYL. Of course.

Mr. CARDIN. Does he believe it is fair to say to the people of the District of Columbia that their right to have a voice in the House of Representatives depends upon the will of the people of Maryland?

Mr. KYL. I say to my colleague, the first point he made was that the State of Maryland should have a say in this, and it should be a definitive say. If the State of Maryland doesn't want the residents of the District of Columbia to be part of the State, that informs our decision about what the people of the State of Maryland want. I wouldn't force that decision upon them any more than the Senator suggests should be the case. The State of Maryland should have that say. If the Senator is saying: I can tell you right now Marylanders don't want these folks from the District as part of their State, we ought to know that by a definitive process rather than assuming it to be the case going into the debate. That would be my response.

Mr. CARDIN. Will my colleague yield further?

Mr. KYL. I am happy to engage in a colloquy.

Mr. CARDIN. I am wondering how my colleague would feel if legislation was introduced here by a Senator not from Arizona saying: I understand what the people of Arizona want better than the Senator does. I want to introduce a bill affecting land rights or property rights or anything in the State of Arizona, and I will make it subject to the vote of the people of Arizona. It will change the border area a little bit, and I know you don't want this, but I am going to do it anyway. I am curious how the Senator would respond if such legislation was introduced and the Senator who introduced it said: I am allowing your Governor to take it to the people. I know there will be a lot of pressure building up on that. But it is not relevant to the Senators from Arizona.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, my colleague makes a good point. I will respond in two ways. First, I appreciate the sentiment and would hope that when western land issues are dealt with in this body, our eastern colleagues would apply that same principle. Frequently, there is a sense that folks in the east know best about what we should be doing with Federal lands in the west. I certainly respect that sentiment. Obviously, in some respects, that is not as important as the fundamental political jurisdictional issue we are facing here. The question of retrocession is a fundamental issue, and it has to do with a fundamental right the District of Columbia residents would have to participate in State government. I recognize there are some differences, but I offer that first response.

Second, I am not presupposing anything with the amendment. The question will always be before the Maryland electorate whether they want to do this. I don't know whether the Maryland electorate wants to do this. I presume there would be a debate. The result of that debate, decided by the people of Maryland or their elected representatives, would be dispositive on the question. Nobody is foisting anything on anyone. I would be the first to say: If the people of Maryland don't want the residents of the District to be part of the State of Maryland, then the Congress would have to be informed by that decision. I would think it would be dispositive.

Could I respond to a couple other points first and then I will be happy to engage in a further colloquy.

On the matter of the way the lines were drawn, the history of this is that the so-called national areas, the areas where the Federal buildings, various Government departments are located, the Mall, the monuments and those sorts of things, would not be part of the retrocession. The bulk of the bill draws those lines. I can't tell my colleague exactly what the philosophy was with respect to each of those areas. Any question about what should or should not be in, be it the Kennedy Center or anything else, is a legitimate subject of discussion. It could be the subject of amendment. This has been a matter that has been not frequently but not infrequently debated in the House of Representatives. So there is some history of the rationale behind the line drawing. But with respect to where any of these particular lines are drawn, obviously, the Senators from Maryland should be key in helping us to decide where those lines would be. There is nothing locked in stone here that could not be considered the subject of an amendment.

Finally, with respect to the unfunded mandate part, I am not sure it wouldn't work the other way around. I cited a couple days ago the statistics about the money that the Government provides for the District of Columbia. Some of that money has to do with the running of these Government departments, the construction of buildings, maintenance of the buildings, and so on, but much of it does not. Much of it has to do with what the Constitution provides as to the general welfare of the people within the District. I suspect that under any scenario, the money that has been provided to the District of Columbia would still be far in excess of the money returned to any of the several States. And because of the unique nature of the District and the history and traditions, much of that funding would naturally carry over to future years. There is no way the Federal Government is not going to fund all of the national areas that are retained in this legislation.

As the District's Delegate NORTON said in a press release recently, much of the money in the stimulus bill that is going to refurbish or construct office buildings that are Federal Government buildings provides employment opportunities for the residents of the District. While we should obviously be sensitive to any issues of transfer, if the State of Maryland were to accept the residents of the District of Columbia, it is a very legitimate point, and all of those things are appropriate for discussion.

On the matter of the unfunded mandate, it would probably work the other way around, that Maryland would receive a lot of money from the Federal Government. In any event, the Federal national areas that would be receiving the amount of money that they naturally do would certainly help the residents who work here in what is now the District of Columbia.

There is nothing in this amendment that is intended to jam anything down the throats of the people of Maryland. They have the final and ultimate say of what is done. I wouldn't propose anything different from that.

Mr. CARDIN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KYL. Absolutely.

Mr. CARDIN. Let me make a brief comment with regard to the mandate on Maryland. Maryland would be under tremendous pressure to change funding formulas consistent with what aid the District currently receives. It would have a major impact on the ability of our State to carry out its fundamental aid formulas to local governments, considering how significant the District would be, the population, relative to the State of Maryland.

The second point is, I can tell you how the people of Maryland feel. They believe the residents of the District of Columbia should have their voting representative in the House of Representatives. That is how the members of our congressional delegation have acted. That is how Senators are acting. We know that is what the District wants. We agree with that. I hope we can get an up-or-down vote on this bill and let's move forward.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. KYL. If I may make one other point, we will have an up-or-down vote on this amendment at 10:30 and on the bill, of course. I want to conclude my comments to the Senator, because he, obviously, has a good sense of what the people of Maryland want. I concede that. Again, I concede the premise of his point which is that the people of Maryland should have a say before this is done. The reason for the amendment is simply this: We believe it is unconstitutional for the Congress to simply provide a congressional district without an amendment to the Constitution. I personally think the residents of the District should be represented in the House. The only other way to do that, for those of us who believe it is unconstitutional to pass the legislation pending before us, and a court will in relatively short order make a determination on whether that is true, and let's assume that the court says, you can't do it, Congress, by simple legislation, then short of a constitutional amendment, this is the only other way to achieve the objective. It is presented in good faith. It is presented as the only other logical alternative for the residents of the District of Columbia to have their own congressional district. Because of the number of people who live in the District, something over 600,000, and because the representation from House congressional districts today is approximately a shade over 600,000, the fact is that the residents of the District could have a district of their own or essentially exactly as the District is configured today without presumably modifying the lines of other Maryland districts. Of course, that would be up to the State of Maryland in the way that it sets its congressional district lines.

Mr. CARDIN. Will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. KYL. I am happy to.

Mr. CARDIN. Having served in the House and also going through redistricting, the courts are now requiring an exact number of equality. So it would be improbable that the lines would remain the same.

Mr. KYL. I said that is why it would be "almost." You might have to include a few residents of what are now Maryland within the District, and I acknowledge that to be the case. In any event, I accept the fundamental premise of the Senator. Our amendment addresses that specifically. My hope would be that if the courts should declare that we cannot by legislation do what this bill attempts, then the people of Maryland would strongly consider whether the next best alternative is to provide for the retrocession we have in this amendment as the next best way to provide a vote for the residents of the District of Columbia.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Arizona and the Senator from Maryland for a thoughtful discussion. I rise to oppose amendment No. 585, offered by the Senator from Arizona. Unlike some of the other amendments pending, this one goes to the heart of what the underlying bill that came out of committee is all about, which is how do we give voting rights in Congress to 600,000 Americans who happen to live in our Nation's Capital who don't have such representation now. I disagree with the method, but I appreciate the fact that this is not germane in a parliamentary sense, but it is directly relevant to the underlying injustice and inequity. But for the reasons that the Senator from Maryland made clear, this is not a practical solution to the problem before us, the longstanding injustice.

It requires the consent of the people of Maryland, and all their leaders tell us that the people will not support it. So it may be a solution on paper, but it is not going to be a solution and a fix to the problem in fact. It is also full of complications that would ensue.

For instance, section 2 of the amendment would automatically transfer all pending legal actions in the District of Columbia to an "appropriate Maryland court." We can only imagine the legal and political tangle that could create given that Maryland and the District actually have distinct legal structures, rules, and precedents. Section 3 of the amendment describes at some length the boundaries of a small but still sizable national capital service area that would continue to be controlled by Congress and which would consist of key Federal buildings and monuments. There are complications there too. Who would police and maintain those streets and otherwise administer this large swath of downtown Washington?

As has been said, it would require a constitutional amendment to repeal amendment XXIII which granted the District of Columbia three electoral votes in Presidential elections. If amendment XXIII were not repealed, presumably the effect would be to grant a disproportionately large role in Presidential elections to a relatively small population that would continue to reside in that national capital service area and that would remain under congressional control. In fact, the amendment recognizes this and, therefore, would not become effective until such a repeal amendment to the Constitution is ratified.

As I have said, this is an alternative solution to the problem. I appreciate it in that it would, if it overcame the obstacles, actually be a remedy, but it is not the right or realistic remedy to the injustice of nonvoting representation in Congress for residents of the District. The right and reasonable and realistic solution is the underlying bill before us, S. 160. That is why I oppose the amendment and urge the passage of the bill.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, let me respond to two points my colleague made, and they are both legitimate questions. The first is some of the technical problems. I am sure there are a lot of technical problems we have not even thought about that would attend. This is a big change. Whether you adopt the underlying legislation or you go through a process such as retrocession, there will have to be a lot of adjustments and accommodations, to be sure.

But on questions such as, for example, policing the Mall and so on, those things are already well understood and resolved. For example, I have spoken recently with Capitol Police and asked them about the overlapping jurisdiction: Where, for example, does the Capitol Police jurisdiction end and where does the DC Police jurisdiction begin, and so on? They have all these things worked out. I do not think there is any difficulty with those kinds of technical issues. But there will be, undoubtedly, others that will have to be addressed as well.

Secondly, my colleague is correct, in order to avoid the anomalous situation where a few people who might be technically residents downtown and not have other residence downtown—being in the Federal areas or national areas as described in this legislation—we would have to eliminate the twenty-third amendment to make sure those people would not have three electoral votes for the Presidency. I cannot imagine that if retrocession did occur the citizens of the country would not follow through on that essentially technical issue and approve the retrocession of the twenty-third amendment. But it is one of the things that will have to be done. That is absolutely true.

Again, I will conclude by saying, for those of us who believe it would be preferable for the residents of the District to have their own representative in the House of Representatives and, in fact, to be able to vote for Senators, and have that representation as well, if they are part of a State—if, in fact, the underlying legislation is unconstitutional, as many of us believe it is—then this amendment offers a constructive way to achieve the same result, I would suggest, with very little in the way of adjustment, but with some adjustment that would have to occur—again, subject solely to the approval of the people of the State of Maryland.

I say to our colleagues, this vote is scheduled for 10:30, so if there are people who want to discuss other amendments or other matters, or to further debate this amendment, this would be a good time to do so.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Arizona. He is absolutely right. I have been informed that the senior Senator from Delaware is on his way to the floor to speak on this amendment. But I echo what Senator KYL has said, that we have some other pending amendments. The floor is open until the vote at 10:30, and I urge our colleagues to come and take advantage of that opening.

With that, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CARPER. Mr. President, yesterday morning, at about 8 o'clock, down in, I think, S. 115, there was a prayer breakfast. Actually, that happens about every week. And for many weeks in the last year or two, our Acting President pro tempore was one of two Members—one a Democrat and one a Republican—who brought people together for an hour of fellowship. They would have breakfast together and sing a hymn—or at least try to sing a hymn—or a song of some kind, and they would share their story, if you will, their spiritual journey with one another.

I usually do not get to go to those; I am on a train coming down from Wilmington, DE. But I have been a time or two, and I find it very uplifting. There is a smaller gathering that will occur today a little after noon, right here off the Senate floor, and it will be a group convened by our Chaplain, Barry Black, who is a retired Navy rear admiral. He used to be Chief of Chaplains for the Navy and the Marine Corps.

What we have is a little bit like an adult Sunday school class. There are people of different faiths who show up. Sometimes we may have five or six or seven or eight or nine people there, Democrats and Republicans.

I always like to tell the story that happened about a couple years ago, when we were having orientation for new Senators—something our Acting President pro tempore has been a part of establishing—but we had a last session of orientation for new Senators—I think it was about 2004, right after the election—a last session where John Breaux, a Democrat, was leaving and Don Nickles, a Republican, was leaving the Senate, and they both were talking to our new Senators and their spouses about bridging the partisan divide.

Don Nickles talked—he has a great sense of humor; so does John Breaux, as we know—and Senator Nickles was about to leave the Senate. He was talking to the Democrats and Republicans who had just arrived, and their spouses, and he said: You all ought to think about going to this Bible study group. It is uplifting. It is inspiring. It is refreshing. You get to know your colleagues better. It does not take that much time every week. He said: You ought to try to do it. TOM CARPER and I go to that Bible study group. He is a Democrat and I am a Republican.

He said: Week after week, month after month, you sit together, you read Scriptures together, you talk and share with one another your thoughts and problems and what you are facing in your life. You pray for each other. He said: You know, after I do that, it is hard to walk out on the Senate floor and stab TOM CARPER in the back. He said: It is not impossible, but it is hard.

One of the other things that is hard is for us to actually figure out how our faith should guide us in the decisions we make here. I am always inspired by the depth of conviction of the floor manager, the chief sponsor of this bill, Senator LIEBERMAN, and how his faith guides him in the work we do here.

But Barry Black, our Chaplain, often challenges us in the Senate—Democrats and Republicans—and not just there, but, later today, in our Bible study class, and also at the Wednesday morning prayer breakfast, and throughout the week—he is always challenging us: How should we use our faith to help guide us in the decisions we make?

The other thing he is good at doing is reminding us, about every other week, of the two great Commandments in the New Testament. The first: Love Thy Lord Thy God with all thy heart, all thy soul, all thy mind. And the second one is: To love thy neighbor as thyself—which we also call the Golden Rule: Treat others the way we want to be treated. Chaplain Black likes to say the “CliffsNotes” of the New Testament is the Golden Rule: Treat other people the way we want to be treated.

When I run into great leaders in my life, in this country and in other countries, a lot of times the good leaders are those who actually internalize the Golden Rule, who do try to treat others the way they want to be treated. I am pleased to say that the two Senators who are here on the floor right now certainly embody that rule too.

How does that pertain to the legislation before us? Well, I think it pertains to the legislation before us because there are about 600,000 people who live in the District of Columbia. Some of them actually work here with us, but they live here in the District of Columbia and they pay taxes. They pay Federal taxes. They don't get to vote. They don't have a vote here in the Senate. They don't have a Representative, if you will, who can vote for them and for their interests and concerns in the House of Representatives.

Delaware has about 850,000 people, so we have a few more people than the District of Columbia. There are some other States that have fewer people than we do. There is actually probably a State or two that has fewer people living in it than does the District of Columbia. I won't call out those States here this morning. They are pretty big in geography but not so big in population. They have two Senators and at least one U.S. Representative. Whether the issue is foreclosures, budget, or stimulus package, they have somebody here to vote, to represent them, to speak on the floor and to offer legislation, amend legislation, and to vote on legislation. We saw in the stimulus package how critical one or two votes can be. The District of Columbia has nobody here and they have nobody voting for them in the House. They have a delegate—a very good one—who can vote in committee, offer legislation, offer amendments, and introduce bills, but can't actually vote when the time comes. There is something about that that seems unfair to me. It seems unfair to me. I think it certainly seems unfair to the sponsor of the bill, Senator LIEBERMAN, and to a lot of people who cosponsored the legislation, as have I.

None of us is suggesting that there ought to be two Senators representing folks from the District of Columbia. In allowing the delegate to become sort of a full-fledged U.S. Representative over in the House, there is a trade that—we would expect that person to be a Democrat, at least initially; maybe someday Republican—but the idea would be to provide an additional Republican representative, in this case from the State of Utah. That seat may become a Democratic seat. I wouldn't want to bet my paycheck on it, but it might. So we are trying to come up with an equitable, a fair, a reasonable compromise. Isn't politics the art of compromise? This is a compromise.

There are some who have suggested that is unconstitutional. I am not a constitutional expert. I know a lot of smart people have considered it. We will have an opportunity—if this legislation is passed and signed by the President, there will be an opportunity for an expedited process and the Federal courts, the appropriate courts will determine whether this measure, this statute actually is constitutionally sound. My hope is it will be. A lot of forethought has gone into this issue already.

In closing, let me say in the minute or so that is left on our side, I wish to thank Senator LIEBERMAN for his steadfast leadership on this issue and for making it not just a bipartisan issue but a tripartisan issue, by making sure we have both Republicans and Democrats and Independents such as himself and BERNIE SANDERS to weigh in and to support this legislation; not just to offer the bill but actually to stand up and call on the rest of us to do what we know in our hearts is fair and just, and to put ourselves in the shoes of the folks who live here in Washington, DC and who work and pay their taxes and who deserve a full-fledged vote, at least in the House of Representatives. We will wait another day to take up that battle here in the Senate.

That having been said, I yield back my time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time for the majority has expired.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, seeing no one on the other side in the Chamber, I ask unanimous consent to speak for no more than 5 minutes, probably less.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I thank the Chair. I will yield if anyone on the other side comes in.

I thank my friend from Delaware for his very eloquent and thoughtful statement. The pending amendment is on retrocession. As the Senator began his remarks about the Bible study and prayer groups, I thought he was going to talk about redemption and not retrocession, but he got to the point. I must say, if I may continue the argument the Senator from Delaware made very eloquently in two ways, S. 160, the underlying bill, does provide—please allow me some license here for a kind of political redemption—for the voters of the District of Columbia who up until this time have been denied a voting representative in Congress. The whole premise of our Government is that we govern with the consent of the governed, but here we have 600,000 Americans who, through historical anomalies and maybe more recently partisan disagreements, don't get to consent or object to anything we do to them or even for them.

The second—and I thank my friend from Delaware for making this point about the Golden Rule. I hope all of our colleagues in the Senate will apply that fundamental ethical human principle to this vote and think about how we would feel if we were the District's Delegate in the House of Representatives. ELEANOR HOLMES NORTON is a gifted and wonderful person. I have known her—I won't state the year because I don't want to compromise the privacy of her age; mine has already been compromised this week. We were at law school together. She is an extraordinarily gifted person and a very diligent and passionate and aggressive advocate for the people of the District of Columbia. Imagine how we would feel if we were occupying the seat she occupies in the House of Representatives. She gets to debate issues. She gets to talk. But when the roll is called, imagine how we would feel—my friend from Delaware and our dear friend from Arkansas who occupies the Chair at the moment, myself—if there were a major item here in the Senate and we could debate it, but then the roll is called and it is as if our mouths are stifled, muffled. We couldn't vote. That is what Delegate NORTON goes through in the House of Representatives. If we think about it that way, in the terms the Senator from Delaware stated, to treat others as we would like to be treated ourselves, it seems only fair, reasonable, human to give Delegate NORTON and the 600,000 people she represents the right to vote on the floor.

So I thank my friend for taking the time to come over and speak as eloquently and convincingly as he has.

With that, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. GILLIBRAND). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Under the previous order, the question is on agreeing to amendment No. 585.

Mr. KYL. Madam President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. DURBIN. I announce that the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) is necessarily absent.

Mr. KYL. The following Senator is necessarily absent: the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. CORKER).

Further, if present and voting, the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. CORKER) would have voted "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 67, as follows:

NOT VOTING—2

The amendment (No. 585) was rejected.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote, and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Madam President, I believe two of our colleagues wish to speak as in morning business at this time. After that, our intention is to pick up the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina, Mr. DEMINT, on the fairness doctrine, and then Senator DURBIN also will be offering a matter on the fairness doctrine as well.

With that in mind, I yield the floor to one of the two Senators to my right, and they may joust as to who goes first.

Mr. BOND. Madam President, I thank my colleague from Connecticut, with whom I worked so closely last fall and at the end of January, for allowing us to go forward. I ask unanimous consent to speak as in morning business, and my colleague, the Senator from Iowa, I believe, wishes to speak as in morning business after that, as indicated by the manager of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The remarks of Mr. BOND and Mr. GRASSLEY are printed in today's RECORD under "Morning Business.")

Mr. ENSIGN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be set aside to call up the amendment No. 587.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Reserving the right to object, it is my understanding that the Senator from Nevada wishes to call up the amendment and speak very briefly—he mentioned to me 2 minutes. I believe I am in the line to speak and I wish to speak on this amendment.

Is that the agreement?

Mr. ENSIGN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to call up my amendment, get it pending, and speak on it for 2 minutes.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Is the subject of this amendment vouchers?

Mr. ENSIGN. Yes.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. No problem.

AMENDMENT NO. 587

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. ENSIGN] proposes an amendment numbered 587.

Mr. ENSIGN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To reauthorize the DC School Choice Incentive Act of 2003 for fiscal year 2010)

At the end, add the following:

SEC. ____ REAUTHORIZATION OF THE DC SCHOOL CHOICE INCENTIVE ACT OF 2003.

(a) REAUTHORIZATION.—Section 313 of the DC School Choice Incentive Act of 2003 (title III of division C of Public Law 108–199, 118 Stat. 134) is amended by striking "fiscal year 2004 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the 4 succeeding fiscal years" and inserting "fiscal year 2010".

(b) SEVERABILITY.—Notwithstanding section 7, if any provision of this Act (other than this section), and amendment made by this Act (other than by this section), or the application of such provision or amendment to any person or circumstance is held to be unconstitutional, this section, the amendment made by this section, and the application of such to any person or circumstance shall not be affected thereby.

Mr. ENSIGN. Madam President, I rise to offer a DC voucher program for low-income children at or below 185 percent of the Federal Poverty Line. Children would be eligible to receive up to $7,500 to attend a private school in the District.

It has been said that education, especially K–12 education is a civil right. I believe it is. In Washington, DC, public schools are failing too many of our kids—especially our low-income kids. These children are trapped in schools that are failing.

About half the kids in Washington, DC, public schools do not graduate, and this is not because of money. The District spends perhaps the most in the country, on education. They spend almost $15,000 a year per student per year in public schools. That is almost three times the amount we spend per student per year in Nevada. Yet the performance of the public schools in the District is pathetic. There are very few Members of Congress who would allow their kids to go to these failing schools.

The reason I am offering my amendment today, which would reauthorize, for 1 year, a very valuable voucher program, is because the upcoming Omnibus appropriations bill basically guts the program. We need to make sure this program is in place in time for parents to plan for their children's education in the fall.

This is an important amendment. This is a civil rights amendment. We are talking about the right to a DC Representative voting here, we should care enough about our children to give them the right to a good education. That is what this amendment is about. Now, we are going to try to work this out. We may not be offering this amendment if we can get an agreement from the majority leader for time on the floor sometime this spring to be able to debate a full bill. That is what I would hope we could be able to do. If not, then we will hope for a vote on this amendment.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Madam President, if I may very briefly respond to my friend from Nevada, I appreciate the statement he has made. Personally, I agree with him on this DC scholarship program which I supported in past years. The authorization is running out.

The Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee, as my friend knows, actually still possesses jurisdiction over matters related to the District of Columbia. So we would be the proper committee to consider an authorization bill.

As I have said to my friend, I do not know what I would support. I do not know what the outcome of the committee would be. But I appreciate the spirit in which he has presented this amendment. I agree with him totally that we ought to be reauthorizing this program, and we will work together to see, with the majority leader, whether we can get an agreement that there will be floor time with a time limit given to a debate and an attempt to reauthorize the program when it expires, which I believe is in this fiscal year, meaning that it would affect the school year that begins in September.

So I will pursue that with the leader and will continue our conversations. I thank him for offering the amendment.

I now yield the floor to our distinguished colleague from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

AMENDMENT NO. 575

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Madam President, I thank the manager of the bill. I rise today to speak in strong opposition to amendment No. 575 offered by Senator ENSIGN. This amendment is not the instant amendment that he just spoke about; it is the amendment that essentially would repeal all commonsense gun laws in the District of Columbia.

I believe the amendment is reckless. I believe it is irresponsible. I believe it will lead to more weapons and more violence on the streets of our Nation's Capital. It will endanger the citizens of the District, the Government employees who work here, our elected officials, and those who visit this great American Capitol. And, of course, if successful, it will be the first new step in a march to remove all commonsense gun regulations all over this land.

The Ensign amendment repeals gun laws promoting public safety, including DC laws that the U.S. Supreme Court indicated were permissible under the second amendment in the Heller decision. I strongly disagree with the Supreme Court decision in Heller that the second amendment gives individuals a right to possess weapons for private purposes not related to State militias, and that the Constitution does not permit a general ban on handguns in the home. But that is the law. It has been adjudicated. It has gone up to the highest Court, and I am one who believes if we do not like the law, we should try to make changes through the proper legal channels. However, it is important to note that Heller also stands for the proposition that reasonable, commonsense gun regulations are entirely permissible.

As the author of the original assault weapons ban that was enacted in 1994, I know commonsense gun regulations do make our communities safer, while at the same time respecting the rights of sportsmen and others to keep and bear arms.

Just yesterday, the Department of Justice announced the arrest of 52 people in California, Minnesota, and Maryland. In addition to seizing 12,000 kilograms of cocaine and more than 16,000 pounds of marijuana, the DEA also seized 169 illegal firearms from members of the Sinoloa Cartel.

Where did they get those guns? It would be interesting to find out because this cartel is one of several that law enforcement believes is responsible for kidnappings and murders within the United States in addition to engaging in violent gun crimes.

In talking about the Sinoloa Cartel yesterday, Attorney General Holder noted that reinstituting the assault weapons ban would benefit the United States, as well as help stop the flood of weapons being sent from the United States to Mexico for use by drug cartels to cause violence on both sides of the border.

I am prepared to wage the assault weapons battle again and intend to do so. I have been quiet about this because there are many pressing needs of this Nation. But with the help of the President, the administration, and the people of this great country, we do need to fight back against these kinds of amendments.

Justice Scalia wrote in the majority opinion on the Heller case that a wide variety of gun laws are "presumptively lawful," including the laws "forbidding the carrying of firearms in sensitive places" and regulations governing "the conditions and qualifications of the commercial sale of arms."

I cannot think of any place more sensitive than the District of Columbia. Even bans on "dangerous and unusual weapons" are completely appropriate under the Heller decision. So it is interesting to me that you have this decision, and then you have the Senate moving even to obliterate what is allowable under the decision.

Senator ENSIGN's amendment completely ignores Heller's language and takes the approach that all guns for all people at all times is called for by Heller. It is not.

We have all seen the tragic consequences of gun violence: the massacre of students at Virginia Tech University in 2007, the murders at Columbine High School in Colorado, the North Hollywood shootout where bank robbers carrying automatic weapons and shooting armor-piercing bullets shot 10 Los Angeles Police Department SWAT officers and seven civilians before being stopped.

We have seen criminal street gangs able to buy weapons at gun shows and out of the back seats or the trunks of automobiles. We have seen their bullets kill hundreds, if not thousands of people across this great land—men, women, and children.

I remember one case in the San Francisco Bay area not long ago where a youngster taking a piano lesson in a home had a bullet from a gang member pierce the wall of the home, cut his spine, and today he is a paraplegic. It is unbelievable for me to think of the ease with which people can buy weapons.

As Senator SCHUMER said, if this amendment becomes law, even if you cannot see, even if you cannot pass a sight test, you can have access to firearms. That is not what this Nation should encourage. Those incidents and the gun violence that occurs every day across this country show us that we should be doing more, not less, to keep guns out of the hands of criminals and the mentally ill and not give them unfettered access to firearms.

It is worth noting just how far this amendment goes in repealing DC law and just how unsafe it will make the streets of this Capitol. Here is what it would do: It would repeal DC's ban on semiautomatic weapons, including assault weapons. If this amendment becomes law, military-style assault weapons with high-capacity magazines will be allowed to be stockpiled in homes and businesses in the District, even near Federal buildings such as the White House and the Capitol. Even the .50 caliber sniper rifle, with a range of over 1 mile, will be allowed in DC under this amendment. This is a weapon capable of firing rounds that can penetrate concrete and armor plating. And at least one model of the .50 caliber sniper rifle is easily concealed and transported. One gun manufacturer describes this model as a "lightweight and tactical" weapon and capable of being collapsed and carried in "a very small inconspicuous package."

Is this what we want to do? There is simply no good reason anyone needs semiautomatic, military-style assault weapons in an urban community. It is unfathomable to me that the same high-powered sniper rifle used by our Armed Forces will be permitted in the Nation's Capital. Yet this is exactly what the amendment would allow if passed by the Senate.

Next, the amendment would repeal existing Federal anti-gun trafficking laws. For years, Federal law has banned gun dealers from selling handguns directly to out-of-State buyers who are not licensed firearms dealers. This has helped substantially in the fight against illegal interstate gun trafficking, and it has prevented criminals from traveling to other States to buy guns.

Senator ENSIGN's amendment repeals this longstanding Federal law and allows DC residents to cross State lines to buy handguns in neighboring States. Illegal gun traffickers will be able to easily obtain large quantities of firearms outside of DC and then distribute those guns to criminals in DC and in surrounding States.

And no one should be so naive as to say that this amendment will not do this. It will. The amendment repeals DC law restricting the ability of dangerous and unqualified people to obtain guns. The amendment also repeals many of the gun regulations that the Supreme Court said were completely appropriate after Heller.

So all of those who will vote for this amendment should not do so thinking they are just complying with the Heller decision. This is part of a march forward by gun lobby interests in this country to begin to remove all commonsense regulations, and no one should think it is anything else.

This would repeal the DC prohibition on persons under the age of 21 from possessing firearms, and it repeals all age limits for the possession of long guns, including assault weapons.

Do we really want that? I think of the story of an 11-year-old who had a reduced barrel shotgun and just recently killed somebody with it. Is this what we want to see all over this country, the ability of virtually anyone to obtain a firearm regardless of their age? I don't think so.

The amendment even repeals the DC law prohibiting gun possession by people who have poor vision. I heard Senator SCHUMER speak about this yesterday afternoon. Unbelievably, under this amendment, the District would be barred from having any vision requirement for gun use, even if someone is blind. Is this the kind of public policy we want to make for our Nation? Is this how co-opted this body is to the National Rifle Association and others? I hope not.

One of the reasons we have 6-year terms is to allow us to make difficult decisions. There is no higher charge than protecting our public safety. We should protect individuals. The way we protect individuals is by enacting public policy that is prudent, reasonable, and subject to common sense. This amendment does none of the above.

I ask my colleagues to think carefully about this amendment, because if it succeeds, trust me, the march for similar legislation will be on. I introduced the assault weapons legislation. I survived. I had an election in 1994, just after I had introduced it. I survived. The people of my State want commonsense gun control. They don't want local jurisdictions stripped of any ability to enact prudent regulation.

The Presiding Officer is in the chair. The husband of one of her colleagues, going home on the Long Island train, was shot and killed by someone who never should have had a weapon. How many of these incidents do we have to have? How many businesses employing people who are mentally ill have to suffer when they have a grudge against an employee, and kill 6, 7, 8, 9, or 10 people? How many schools do we have to have where aggrieved students go out and acquire the most powerful weapons and come into cafeterias, libraries, or classrooms and mow down students? A vote for this amendment, any way we look at it, makes this easier to happen.

I believe passionately about this. I will never forget, many years ago, before I was mayor, walking into the robbery of a corner grocery store. When people die of gunshot wounds, it is not the way it is on television or in the movies. I saw brain matter all over the walls. I saw the husband, a proprietor, the wife, a proprietor. This individual who came in even shot the dog. People are capable of terrible criminality. We should not encourage that criminality by making their access to weapons so very easy.

As I say, this is the first step in a march to see that there is no ability to enact prudent gun regulation throughout the United States.

I ask every colleague, before they vote for this, to think about the people they represent and whether society is going to be safer because of their vote. How deep have we sunk in catering to these interests? For shame.

The amendment before the Senate repeals all firearm registration requirements in the District, making it even more difficult for law enforcement to trace guns used in crimes and track down the registered owner. The amendment repeals all existing safe-storage laws and prohibits the District from enacting any additional safe-storage laws. After the Heller decision, the District passed emergency legislation to allow guns to be unlocked for self-defense, but requiring that they otherwise be kept locked to keep guns out of the hands of children and criminals. We all ought to want that. The Ensign amendment repeals even this modest limitation and prevents the District of Columbia City Council from enacting any law that discourages—whatever that means—gun ownership or requiring the safe storage of firearms. How can we, in the Capital of the United States where we have had so many tragic events, possibly do this? This is simply ridiculous and goes well beyond the Supreme Court's ruling in Heller.

Think about what this means. Consider that every major gun manufacturer recommends that guns be kept unloaded, locked, and kept in a safe place. Under this amendment, the District could not enact any legislation requiring that guns be stored in a safe place, even in homes with children. How can anyone believe this broad-brush amendment is the right thing to do? How can any of us believe it provides protection for the people we represent?

Let me make one other point. The American people clearly do not agree with this amendment. Last fall, when a virtually identical bill was being considered in the House of Representatives, a national poll found that 69 percent of Americans opposed Congress passing a law to eliminate the District's gun laws—69 percent. That is about as good as we get on any controversial issue. Additionally, 60 percent of Americans believe Washington will become less safe if Congress takes this step. Is this what we want? Do we want the Capital of the United States to become less safe? I don't think so. Today, if this amendment passes in the Senate, it will be directly against the wishes of the American people. It will not pass because it is good public policy—it will only be passed to placate the National Rifle Association. I say for shame.

As a former mayor who saw firsthand what happens when guns fall into the hands of criminals, juveniles, and the mentally ill, I believe this amendment places the families of the District of Columbia in great jeopardy. The amendment puts innocent lives at stake. It is an affront to the public safety of the District. It is an affront to local home rule. This isn't just a bad amendment; it is a very dangerous one. I very strongly urge Senators to join me in opposing it.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Madam President, I appreciate the debate on several key amendments. I also want to recognize my colleague from California and her strong support—indeed, key position—on the voucher program, the DC scholarship program that she has been one of the primary architects of and wants to get measurables on it. It is in the subcommittee on appropriations on which I serve, and she has been a key person on that. It is my hope we can work that out, whether it is going to be at a later time for reauthorization or if we can pass it here today. It is a key program, and I want to recognize what my colleague has done on that historically. That is what I come to the floor to talk about, as well as a couple of other things that are coming up but particularly the DC scholarship program. It is an amendment. We have it appropriated in the appropriations bill, but it is required for reauthorization. It needs to be reauthorized. My hope is that the majority leader will say, yes, we will bring this up for reauthorization and give us floor time to do that. I understand the manager of this bill has said he would bring it up in his committee and do a markup in committee.

I have worked for this program for some period of time. I have worked with the students and parents in this program. They love it. They appreciate the chance to succeed in a failed school system. The DC Opportunity Scholarship Program has received applications from over 7,000 low-income students, has served over 2,600 of these children. We have far more applicants than we do slots. When these students entered the program, they had average math and reading test scores in the bottom third of all test takers. Recent evaluation by the U.S. Department of Education—this goes back to last year—affirms academic gains among scholarship students less than 2 years after receiving a scholarship. Last year, after less than 1 year in the program, two subgroups of students, representing 83 percent of participating students, showed positive results in math, and both years showed overwhelming parental satisfaction. Parents like it. Students are doing better. It is working.

I certainly wish to salute Mayor Fenty and DC school chancellor Michelle Rhee for making education reform and support for this program something important in the District. They made this a high priority.

Certainly, we have to get the schools functioning in the District of Columbia. This is a piece of it that is working for 1,700 students. We need it reauthorized to be able to continue to move it forward. It would be heartless for us not to do it.

I recognize a number of people have a problem with it on this bill. I understand that. If there is a chance we can get an agreement that the reauthorization would take place later, that would be a wise route to go, and then follow through regular order. But this one is working and is working well. It is being well received by parents and students. It has an odd sort of support base where it has both left and right. It has a lot of people in a low-income situation supporting it. It is one of those pieces of legislation that have a broad base of support ideologically and practically. People want to see it moving forward and have it succeed as an overall program. I am very hopeful this Congress can do that.

Two other quick points. One is coming up on the fairness doctrine that will be considered. The fairness doctrine, to educate my colleagues—I am sure everybody is familiar with it—was promulgated by the FCC in 1949 to ensure that contrasting viewpoints would be presented on radio and television.

In 1985, the FCC began the process of repealing the doctrine after concluding that it actually resulted in broadcasters limiting coverage of controversial issues of public importance.

Now we are hearing from some voices saying this doctrine should be put back in place. I urge colleagues to not do that. This isn't the way for us to get a good discussion going in the public marketplace. Indeed, the results in the past, and I believe today, would be that the doctrine would actually result in less, not more, broadcasting of important issues to the public. Airing controversial issues would subject broadcasters to regulatory burdens and potentially severe liabilities. They simply would say: We will not put anything on.

Just think about the changing landscape in broadcast radio and television that has taken place since 1949. These numbers are startling. In 1949, there were 51 television stations in the country and 2,500 radio stations. Maybe a lot of people wish we would go back to that era of less media, but we will not. In 1958, there were 1,200 television stations and 9,800 radio stations. Today, there are 1,800 television stations and 14,000 radio stations. There is simply no scarcity to justify content mandates such as the fairness doctrine that would be a regulatory nightmare for radio and television stations. Plus, we have all the new media, social networking, and individual citizen access to information on the Internet that does not warrant this being put back into place.

Finally, to comment on the second amendment rights, the Supreme Court, in a historic ruling, has found that second amendment rights apply to the individual, and that applies to individuals across the country, that applies to individuals in the District of Columbia. I think those should be continued and guaranteed and supported by this body as well. I think it would be appropriate for us to support that and support that in this legislation.

Madam President, in conclusion, I would like to have printed in the RECORD two editorials in agreement from two publications that frequently do not agree. One is from the Wall Street Journal and the other is from the Washington Post. Both are in support of the DC voucher program, saying it works—it works for kids, it works for parents—and is something that should be continued. I have never had printed in the RECORD before editorials from those two publications at the same time agreeing on the same topic, particularly in education. I think what it says is that this one is working and should be continued.

So I ask unanimous consent that the editorials be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, Feb. 25, 2009]
OBAMA'S SCHOOL CHOICE

President Obama made education a big part of his speech Tuesday night, complete with a stirring call for reform. So we'll be curious to see how he handles the dismaying attempt by Democrats in Congress to crush education choice for 1,700 poor kids in the District of Columbia.

The omnibus spending bill now moving through the house includes language designed to kill the Opportunity Scholarship Program offering vouchers for poor students to opt out of rotten public schools. The legislation says no federal funds can be used on the program beyond 2010 unless Congress and the D.C. City Council reauthorize it. Given that Democrats control both bodies—and that their union backers hate school choice—this amounts to a death sentence.

Republicans passed the program in 2004, with help from Democratic Senator Dianne Feinstein, and it has been extremely popular. Families receive up to $7,500 a year to attend the school of their choice. That's a real bargain, given that D.C. public schools spend $14,400 per pupil on average, among the most in the country.

To qualify, a student's household income must be at or below 185% of the poverty level. Some 99% of the participants are minority, and the average annual income is $23,000 for a family of four. A 2008 Department of Education evaluation found that participants had higher reading scores than their peers who didn't receive a scholarship, and there are four applicants for each voucher.

Vouchers also currently exist in Arizona, Florida, Georgia, Ohio, Louisiana, Utah and Wisconsin. And school choice continues to proliferate elsewhere in the form of tax credits and charter schools. The District's is the only federally funded initiative, however, and local officials from former Mayor Anthony Williams to current Mayor Adrian Fenty and Schools Chancellor Michelle Rhee support its continuation. As Ms. Rhee put it in a December 2007 interview with the Journal, "I would never, as long as I am in this role, do anything to limit another parent's ability to make a choice for their child. Ever."

Ms. Rhee is working to reform all D.C. public schools, which in 2007 ranked last in math and second-to-last in reading among all U.S. urban school systems on the federal National Assessment of Educational Progress. Without the vouchers, more than 80% of the 1,700 kids would have to attend public schools that haven't made "adequate yearly progress" under No Child Left Behind. Remember all of those Members of Congress standing and applauding on Tuesday as Mr. Obama called for every American child to get some education beyond high school? These are the same Members who protect and defend a D.C. system in which about half of all students fail even to graduate from high school.

On Tuesday, Mr. Obama spoke of the "historic investment in education" in the stimulus bill, which included a staggering, few-strings-attached $140 billion to the Department of Education over two years. But he also noted that "our schools don't just need more resources; they need more reform," and he expressed support for charter schools and other policies that "open doors of opportunity for our children."

If he means what he says, Mr. Obama won't let his fellow Democrats consign 1,700 more poor kids to failing schools he'd never dream of letting his own daughters attend.

VOUCHER SUBTERFUGE

Congressional Democrats want to mandate that the District's unique school voucher program be reauthorized before more federal money can be allocated for it. It is a seemingly innocuous requirement. In truth it is an ill-disguised bid to kill a program that gives some poor parents a choice regarding where their children go to school. Many of the Democrats have never liked vouchers, and it seems they won't let fairness or the interests of low-income, minority children stand in the way of their politics. But it also seems they're too ashamed—and with good reason—to admit to what they're doing.

At issue is a provision in the 2009 omnibus spending bill making its way through Congress. The $410 billion package provides funds for the 2009–10 school year to the D.C. Opportunity Scholarship Program, a pioneering effort that awards scholarships of up to $7,500 a year for low-income students to attend private schools. But language inserted by Democrats into the bill stipulates that any future appropriations will require the reauthorization of the program by Congress and approval from the D.C. Council.

We have no problem with Congress taking a careful look at this initiative and weighing its benefits. After all, it was approved in 2004 as a pilot program, subject to study. In fact, this is the rare experimental program that has been carefully designed to produce comparative results. But the proposed Democratic provision would short-circuit this study. Results are not due until June, and an additional year of testing is planned. Operators of the program need to accept applications this fall for the 2010–11 school year, and reauthorizations are complicated, time-consuming affairs. Indeed, staff members on various House and Senate committees scoffed yesterday when we asked about the chances of getting such a program reauthorized in less than a year. Legislation seeking reauthorization has not even been introduced.

If the Democratic leadership is so worried about process, it might want to review a recent report from the Congressional Budget Office listing the hundreds of millions of dollars that have been appropriated to programs whose authorizations have expired. Many of these programs get far more than the $14 million allocated to the Opportunity Scholarships. House Minority Leader John A. Boehner (R-Ohio) was right to call out the Democrats for this back-door attempt to kill the voucher program. The attention should embarrass congressional Democrats into doing the right thing. If not, city leaders, including D.C. Mayor Adrian M. Fenty (D), need to let President Obama know that some 1,800 poor children are likely to have their educations disrupted.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Madam President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. HAGAN). The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now debate concurrently the DURBIN amendment No. 591 and the DEMINT amendment No. 573; that no amendments be in order to either amendment prior to a vote in relation to the amendment; with the time equally divided and controlled between Senators DURBIN and DEMINT or their designees; that at 2 p.m. today, the Senate proceed to vote in relation to the Durbin amendment No. 591, to be followed by a vote in relation to the DeMint amendment No. 573; that prior to the second vote, there be 2 minutes of debate equally divided and controlled in the usual form, and the second vote be 10 minutes in duration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DEMINT. Madam President, reserving the right to object—and I will not object—will the time be equally divided between now and 2 o'clock?

Mr. LIEBERMAN. That was my understanding. As a point of clarification, it actually is as I suggested earlier, which is that the floor is open for debate from now until 2 and that the time is equally divided. Obviously, if others want to come to the floor and speak about something else, they can ask unanimous consent to do that.

Mr. DEMINT. Madam President, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

AMENDMENT NO. 573

Mr. DEMINT. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to set aside the pending amendment and call up DeMint amendment No. 573.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DEMINT] proposes an amendment numbered 573.

Mr. DEMINT. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To prevent the Federal Communications Commission from repromulgating the fairness doctrine)

At the end of the bill add the following:

SEC. 9. FAIRNESS DOCTRINE PROHIBITED.

(a) LIMITATION ON GENERAL POWERS: FAIRNESS DOCTRINE.—Title III of the Communications Act of 1934 is amended by inserting after section 303 (47 U.S.C. 303) the following new section:

"SEC. 303A. LIMITATION ON GENERAL POWERS: FAIRNESS DOCTRINE.

"Notwithstanding section 303 or any other provision of this Act or any other Act authorizing the Commission to prescribe rules, regulations, policies, doctrines, standards, guidelines, or other requirements, the Commission shall not have the authority to prescribe any rule, regulation, policy, doctrine, standard, guideline, or other requirement that has the purpose or effect of reinstating or repromulgating (in whole or in part)—

"(1) the requirement that broadcasters present or ascertain opposing viewpoints on issues of public importance, commonly referred to as the 'Fairness Doctrine', as repealed in In re Complaint of Syracuse Peace Council against Television Station WTVH, Syracuse New York, 2 FCC Rcd. 5043 (1987); or

"(2) any similar requirement that broadcasters meet programming quotas or guidelines for issues of public importance."

(b) SEVERABILITY.—Notwithstanding section 7(a), if any provision of section 2(a)(1), 2(b)(1), or 3 or any amendment made by those sections is declared or held invalid or unenforceable by a court of competent jurisdiction, the amendment made by subsection (a) and the application of such amendment to any other person or circumstance shall not be affected by such holding.

Mr. DEMINT. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to add as cosponsors to my amendment Senators VITTER, INHOFE, WICKER, BOND, BENNETT, ENZI, BARRASSO, BROWNBACK, and ALEXANDER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DEMINT. Thank you, Madam President.

This has been a good debate, not just about DC voting rights but constitutional rights in our country, and if we are going to go by our own opinions and good intentions or are we going to follow the Constitution. Clearly, a lot of us wish to give fair representation to everyone who lives in the District of Columbia. But our oath of office is not to our good intentions, it is to protect and defend the Constitution of the United States.

The Constitution is very clear that Congressmen and Senators are allocated only to States. The District of Columbia was set up as a neutral entity, certainly where people will live and work associated with the business of the Federal Government, but there is nothing in the Constitution that would give a Congressman or Senators to this Federal District of Columbia. So we are talking about a constitutional issue.

We have had other constitutional issues, such as the Bill of Rights guarantee to bear arms, and there will be an amendment to that effect with the bill. I wish to bring up another constitutional issue, which is the right of free speech and the freedom of the press.

A number of Members of Congress have been talking about the annoyance of having radio talk show hosts talk about what we are doing here. I do not blame the other side for being annoyed when a radio talk show host actually describes what is in a bill, since we have gotten in the habit of not actually reading them ourselves. When we have radio talk show hosts all around the country going through page by page, contradicting what is actually being said here, I can understand that people wish to muzzle those radio talk show hosts. That could be the opinion of some of those in Congress today, but it happens to go against the Constitution when we try to decide what people can say and what they believe.

There is actually a doctrine that was mentioned by the Senator from Kansas called the fairness doctrine that is one of those political doublespeak titles that is radio censorship that actually tries to control what radio talk show hosts could say. That doctrine was dispensed with by Reagan, and since then we have thousands of radio talk shows with wide varieties of opinion. But many are starting to talk about bringing back this radio censorship idea to try to force radio stations to present alternative opinions every time a radio talk show host presents an opinion of their own.

What this would do is create a dysfunctional situation where no radio station could afford to have a talk show host express an opinion of any kind if they had to go out and find someone to express the opposite opinion and in the meantime face lawsuit after lawsuit from the ACLU and others. Because whose opinion is going to determine what is fair, what is balanced, what is diverse? But the whole implication here is that the Federal Government and the Federal Communications Commission are somehow going to decide for us what is fair and what is balanced and what is diverse.

The amendment I am offering today, which we call the Broadcaster Freedom Act, would prohibit the Federal Communications Commission from reestablishing any part of what is called the "fairness doctrine" into their regulatory structure today.

Plain and simple, most people here have said they do not want it to come back. President Obama said last week he is against the fairness doctrine. So who could oppose us making it a law that some bureaucrat over at the Federal Communications Commission could not write into regulations all or parts of this censorship of radio talk shows across the country?

It is a pretty simple amendment, but I have a feeling it is getting ready to sound lot more complicated when the other side starts presenting what is in it. We have found in this body that the facts, the truths, sometimes do not make a lot of difference. But anyone who votes against my amendment, the Broadcaster Freedom Act, is voting against the Constitution. They are voting against the freedom of the press. They are voting against the freedom of speech in this country.

The one hope we have to turn this Government around, to stop this spending, and the intervention in all areas of our life, is a free press that can tell people the truth about what is going on. More and more, we have the radio talk show hosts and the bloggers and some cable news that every day are telling Americans more about what we are doing, and Americans are getting more informed, they are getting more engaged and increasingly more outraged about what we are doing.

I encourage my colleagues to support my amendment and to vote against this side by side that is being presented by the Democratic majority. What we are seeing in this side by side is the real intention of the Democratic majority as far as dealing with this fairness doctrine. They are going to propose that we as a Congress direct the Federal Communications Commission—that we are going to say: "shall take actions to encourage and promote diversity in communication media ownership."

Now, they are not just saying radio here. This is "communication." This includes the Web, the Internet, the blogs, blogisphere, television, newspapers. This language would direct the Federal Communications Commission to take action to enforce diversity in communication. This is Soviet-style language that you are going to get some rosy picture of in a minute. But it is so open and so vague that about every communication outlet in this country is going to be faced with accusations that their ownership is not diverse.

What does "diverse" mean? Does it mean "white and black"? What they are after is what they believe, what their opinions are. If this were applied to our offices here in the Senate, we could not say anything, I could not express my opinion today without being obligated by law to go find somebody to say something completely opposite of what I am saying. This is not freedom. Anyone who votes for this alternative is voting to repress the freedom of speech in this country, the freedom of media.

The second part of what they have after "promote diversity in communication media"—all media; only the lawyers and the bureaucrats are going to tell us what that means—is "to ensure that broadcast station licenses are used in the public interest." That is already a law, and that is good, and television and radio stations that use the public airwaves all over the country are held accountable by current law to do things in the public interest, and many of them are very good at that, and it is very helpful in our communities.

But I will ask my colleagues not to let this distraction confuse them about the real intention. If we pass the broadcaster freedom amendment today, we are going to close the front door to taking away the freedom of speech in this country. But this alternative opens the backdoor to what the Democratic majority is after; that is, to muzzle this annoyance of people on the radio who are telling the truth about what is going on in this Congress.

If they can go out and threaten a station that they are not diverse in their ownership, and some judge or some bureaucrat is going to decide whether they are diverse—and who knows what that means—we are going to create such risk and such liability and such intimidation that this will not even look like America in a few years.

This is dangerous material that is being offered on the other side. I will encourage my colleagues to remember our oath of office. It has nothing to do with enforcing our opinions or some judge's opinion on some radio station out there that is trying to give its opinion to the American people. We are dangerously close to the enslavement of socialism in this country with the expansion of Government on every front.

This is intolerable. Do not let the pretty language you are getting ready to hear confuse you because this is against everything we swear an oath to in this Congress. I encourage my colleagues to vote against the Durbin amendment, vote for the Broadcaster Freedom Act, and I would appreciate their support.

Thank you, Madam President, and I reserve the remainder of my time.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

AMENDMENT NO. 591

MR. DURBIN. Madam President, I am beginning to believe the Senator from South Carolina opposes my amendment. He has called it unconstitutional, Communist, socialistic, enslavement, and he is just getting started. So I wish to explain what the debate is all about.

It is a fundamental question, and it is one I have reflected on. The fairness doctrine is the idea that broadcasters should cover issues important to local viewers and should cover these issues fairly; in other words, allow for different viewpoints to be heard and allow those ideas to be presented in a way that is balanced or, as one of the networks say, fair and balanced.

The fairness doctrine isn't a new idea; it is one that has been around in some shape or form since the 1920s, and it was formally adopted by the Federal Communications Commission as a standard in 1949—60 years ago. Back then, though, the world was a lot different. Television was in its infancy. It was just starting. In the 1950s, of course, there emerged three major television networks—NBC, ABC, and CBS. Congress and the FCC had a legitimate concern that these three networks and their local stations could abuse their power, because when you broadcast to radio and television consumers, you are not using something you own, you are using the public airways. We own it. All of us collectively as Americans own it. We license those who use it and say: You are allowed to broadcast your television signal or your radio signal and you have to do it under certain rules and regulations. Listening to the Senator from South Carolina, he is basically saying: Government, step aside. If a private entity wants to get involved in broadcasting, that is an exercise of free speech.

Well, historically, the courts have not agreed with my friend from South Carolina. They have said that you can impose reasonable obligations on those who have licenses to use the airwaves. They don't own the airwaves; the public owns the airwaves, and there is a public interest in reaching certain goals in those airwaves. One of those public interests was expressed and defined for many years as the fairness doctrine. The fairness doctrine basically said Americans are entitled to hear both sides of the story so there is balance and fairness in the news and in the expressions of ideas on these radio and TV stations. The fairness doctrine was clearly I think American, not Communist; constitutional—no one struck it as unconstitutional during the period of time it was in effect—and I don't know about the enslavement of socialism; I will have to reflect on that for a minute. But the fact is, it was the law of the land. The mightiest broadcast stations, radio and TV stations that could have gone to court, I say to my friend from South Carolina, and challenge that idea as unconstitutional were not successful in doing so. It is hard to imagine we would restrict their broadcasting and they wouldn't challenge it if it was unconstitutional. Well, that is a fact. Facts sometimes are hard to deal with in debates such as this, but that was the reality.

That was then and this is now. The world has changed. The world of broadcasting has changed. We still have the major networks—ABC, NBC, and CBS—but we also have CNN, FOX News, MSNBC, and hundreds of other channels on cable TV. We have public broadcasting. We have more than 14,000 AM and FM radio stations, hundreds of satellite radio stations, and we have the Internet. It is clear that technology has changed dramatically since 1949 and the institution of the fairness doctrine. There are more ways now than ever to hear a variety of perspectives on a number of issues.

So when the fairness doctrine was repealed in 1987, many of us objected. The basic argument: Americans have the right to hear both sides of the story; television and radio stations should still hold themselves to that standard. Let the American people decide. Don't let one major network jam through a political viewpoint over the public airwaves that the American people, frankly, have to take or leave. I thought that was the right position then in 1987, but I will tell my colleagues the world has changed.

President Obama has said while on the campaign trail and in the White House that he doesn't support reinstating the fairness doctrine, and neither do I. You will find no mention of the fairness doctrine on the White House Web site; you will find no effort to reinstitute the fairness doctrine in my amendment. Because, quite honestly, now it isn't a question of NBC giving me one point of view and I have to take it or leave it. We all know what happens when you go home with the remote control; you have more choices than you know what to do with. That gives a variety of opinions an opportunity to be expressed on television—the same thing is true on radio—for Americans to hear a different point of view. If they want to switch from Rachel Maddow to Bill O'Reilly, they will hear a much different view of the world. It is there. It reflects the reality of technology and media today.

So I think it is interesting that the Senator from South Carolina still bangs away at this notion that some people on the floor want to reinstate the fairness doctrine. I don't. There may be others who do. My amendment has nothing to do with that.

The amendment Senator DEMINT has written was not carefully written. I don't know if he understands some of the language he included. I call his attention to a paragraph in his amendment, paragraph 2 of section 303A. It seems like a very general statement that shouldn't cause any trouble, but I am afraid it does, because after he goes after eliminating the fairness doctrine, he also includes any similar requirement that broadcasters meet program and quotas or guidelines for issues of public importance. Now, that is a problem. I don't know if he understands it is a problem, but it is. This amendment does more than ban the FCC from doing something it wasn't going to do anyway. Incidentally, nobody is talking about reinstating the fairness doctrine. This is the "bloody shirt." That term is a political term that came about after the Civil War when people would come to the floor and try to inflame passions, and they said: You are waving the bloody shirt of the war; stop that. Let's have a rational conversation.

Well, the rightwing broadcasters on their side, conservative broadcasters, have been waving this bloody shirt of the fairness doctrine for months. They love this. They have set up this kind of false choice that you are going to take away the right of free speech and they are trying to impose the fairness doctrine. It hasn't happened, it isn't going to happen, and I am not trying to make it happen.

The DeMint amendment also contains a provision which I read to my colleagues that seriously cripples the FCC's ability to ensure responsible broadcasting. Remember: Public airwaves that the radio and TV station owners apply for a license from the Government to use to make money. The public airwaves truly are the property of the American people. We say to broadcasters that in return for a license to use those airwaves, your Government is going to ask that you use them in the public interest. Now, what does it mean to say we use the airwaves in the public interest? According to Senator DEMINT, it is the enslavement of socialism. Well, here are the 14 major elements listed by the FCC when it comes to defining the public interest: Opportunity for local self-expression, development and use of local talent, programs for children, religious programs, educational programs, public affairs programs, editorialization by licensees, political broadcasts, agricultural programs, news programs, weather and market services, sports programs, service to minority groups, and entertainment programming.

Senator DEMINT's amendment—that second paragraph I read which has not been carefully written—goes way beyond stopping the fairness doctrine; it undermines the FCC's ability to make sure broadcasters meet these public interest obligations. So what. What if the public interest requirement disappeared tomorrow? What difference would it make? Let me tell my colleagues the difference it would make. There would be no requirement that your local station provide local news and weather. There would be no requirement that your local television station provide children with programming that is free from sex and violence. There would be no requirement to make sure advertising to children is subject to appropriate limitations and no requirement to provide a minimum amount of educational programming on each channel. Does that have anything to do with the fairness doctrine?

It doesn't. What Senator DEMINT is doing is undermining broadcasting in the public interest.

If a station decided to run a religious program, they would be doing it in the public interest. Senator DEMINT removes that definition of public interest. In fact, he says—let's go back to the exact language of his amendment. He says, "any similar requirement that broadcasters meet programming quotas or guidelines for issues of public importance." So his language goes too far.

What we have tried to do is to make sure we don't limit the FCC's ability to protect the most vulnerable and impressionable viewers and listeners in America—our kids and our grandkids. The DeMint amendment takes away that requirement of licensees, radio and TV licensees, to protect children from sex and violence. They might do it anyway, they might not, but there would be no license requirement under the DeMint language.

I still believe broadcasters who use public airwaves should use them in a fair and reasonable way in the public interest, and I believe the FCC should be able to enforce this. If the DeMint amendment is passed and if it became law, if you wanted to enforce the fact that on Saturday morning, when a lot of kids are watching television, the local television station is running a gory movie or one that is on the edge when it comes to sexual content, it would be hard, if not impossible, to do it. I am sure that is not the Senator's intent, but that paragraph was very poorly written, and that is why I change it.

Now, there is also the suggestion by the Senator from South Carolina that if we encourage diversity of media ownership, somehow that is communistic. From my point of view, it is not. Diversity of ownership opens the public airwaves to a variety of different owners. I am not saying here—and no one is suggesting—that the law for the Federal Communications Commission says you can give this license to a Republican and this one to a Democrat or this one to a liberal and this one to a conservative. When I talk about diversity of media ownership, it relates primarily to gender and race and other characteristics of that nature. We don't mandate it, even though you would think we did when you hear Senator DEMINT read from my amendment. What we say is the Commission shall take actions to encourage and promote diversity in communications media ownership. I don't think that is a mandate to give licenses to any one group; it just says "take actions to promote and encourage," something that is already in the law.

I might say to the Senator, section 307B of the Communications Act—and I hope you will have your staff look at it—requires that the FCC ensure that license ownership be spread among diverse communities. It is there already. It is there already. This enslavement of socialism, in the words of the Senator from South Carolina, is already there. I don't think this is socialistic, communistic or unconstitutional. It is in the law. So to say we are going to promote what the law already says is hardly a denial of basic constitutional freedoms. Second, the Communications Act requires the FCC to eliminate market entry barriers for small businesses to increase the diversity of media voices. That is section 257, which I hope your staff will look at too.

To argue that what I am putting in here is a dramatic change in the law or is going to somehow muzzle Rush Limbaugh is not the case. What we are suggesting is, it is best that we follow the guidelines already in the law to promote and encourage diversity in media ownership. Even with cable, satellite, and Internet, broadcast TV and radio, there are still important ways we learn about what is going on in our communities and in our country.

The Senator from South Carolina went on to say this amendment would affect the Internet and blogs. I have to remind the Senator they are not licensed. They don't have FCC licenses. They are not affected by this debate. You can start a blog tomorrow, I can, too, and I don't have to go to the FCC for approval. They certainly cannot monitor that blog to determine whether it is in the public interest. That is not the law. The Senator is on this rampage and, yet, when you look at the facts, they do not apply to the Internet or blogs.

We should be concerned, however, that the policies of the last decade have led to bigger and more consolidated media outlets controlling more of the stations and more of the content. As a result of these policies today, women and minorities are less likely to own media stations, even though the existing law says that is a goal when it comes to licensure. Nationwide, women own just 5 percent of all broadcast TV stations. Racial or ethnic minorities own just 3.3 percent. In Chicago, the city I am proud to represent—diverse and vibrant with many significant minority communities—there is only one commercial TV station owned by a racial or ethnic minority. The numbers are almost as dismal in radio. Nationwide, women own just 6 percent of broadcast stations; minorities, 7.7 percent. In Chicago, only four radio stations are owned by minorities. That is about 5 percent of the radio stations in Chicago, less than the national average.

The content of the media should reflect the diversity of America. These statistics show this is not currently the case. The law says that should be our goal. The existing law says that should be our goal. I restate the existing law, and the Senator from South Carolina calls it communism. I don't think it is. I think it is still a worthy goal so that there is diversity in ownership, diversity in stations. I am acknowledging the obvious.

I am acknowledging the obvious: We are no longer in the world of three television networks; we are in a world where we have many different choices. I ask that we reaffirm diversity and media ownership so there will be choices. I hope the Senator from South Carolina cannot argue that we should not have choices, that we cannot turn the dial to our favorite stations, or punch the remote control to reach those stations. I think that as long as America has those choices, it serves the original goal of letting us hear different sides of the story and doesn't reimpose the fairness doctrine, which none of us are asking for.

We need to make the media more accessible to all voices in America. Isn't that what we are all about in this country? Don't we basically say we trust the people of this country to hear both sides of the story and make up their own minds? We sure do. We give them a right to vote. I guess that is the most instructive delegation of authority you can give to a person: you get to pick your leadership based on your opinion.

All I am asking is that we encourage diversity of media ownership so there are more options, more opinions being shared, and Americans can choose the ones they want. I will repeat so my friend from South Carolina understands clearly, I do not favor the reinstatement of the fairness doctrine. The world has changed. The world of media and technology has changed. I believe Americans are entitled to hear different points of view, and that is why I restate the existing law—and I have given citations for both sections of the Communications Act—which is that we need to have more diversity in media ownership in America. I have not proposed taking away a license from anybody or giving one to anybody. Setting this as a goal is as American as apple pie and has nothing to do with communism or Marxism.

I say to the Senator I was careful in writing this amendment, so I included a section very similar to his section (2) but narrowing it to the issue of fairness. I say—and this is so short that I will read parts:

The Commission shall take actions to encourage and promote diversity in communication ownership and ensure that broadcast station licenses are used in the public interest.

That is so there is diversity in ownership and we protect kids from sex and violence. If the Senator thinks that is communism, I disagree with him.

Then I say:

Nothing in section 303A—

Which is what we are talking about in this amendment—shall be construed to limit the authority of the commission regarding matters unrelated to a requirement that broadcasters present or ascertain opposing viewpoints on issues of public importance.

I protect what I think was the intent of his amendment to prohibit the re-institution of the fairness doctrine, which nobody has suggested, but to make it clear that is as far as we go. We are not eliminating the requirement of broadcasting in the public interest for obvious reasons: We want to protect kids; we want to protect families; we want to keep sex and violence away from kids; and make sure there is local news and weather so people can turn on the TV stations and learn about it.

All of these things, from my point of view, are constructive, and I hope we all agree. The Senator from South Carolina has said that old DURBIN will argue for the fairness doctrine. Let's correct the record. I am not doing that. The fairness doctrine, in 2009, doesn't make sense. It might have made sense in 1948. We should not reinstitute that, but let's not give up on fairness. Let's make sure American viewers of television and listeners of radio have choices. Making those choices can form an opinion that leads to their expression of points of view and their votes. There is nothing wrong with that.

For the people who want to take a license and use the airwaves, there are basic rules. We don't want you to put gory movies and sex on television during early morning hours on a Saturday when kids are watching. We want you to be careful in your content so you don't do something that is abusive of your use of our public airwaves.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. DEMINT. Madam President, I always enjoy a good debate with the Senator from Illinois. He is certainly good at what he does and, in this case, that is confusing facts. The good news for us and all Americans is, this afternoon, on radio talk shows all across the country, they can find out what is in both of these amendments and what it really means. They are not going to hear it here today. There have been a lot of distortions but interesting admissions.

Certainly, the Senator from Illinois made it very clear that he should be a part of determining what is fair and balanced and how we should determine what is both sides. He mentioned there are 14,000 radio stations. What he does with his amendment is he orders "shall take action to encourage and promote diversity and communication media ownership." He wants our FCC to monitor 14,000 radio stations to decide if their ownership is diverse. He said it doesn't apply to the Internet, but we do regulate the Internet. We regulate everything in America, folks—everything that a Federal dollar touches.

Believe me, this language is not just about radio stations; it is about doing the impossible, and that is to centrally manage the ownership of radio and other communications in this country. It goes back to his original opinion that, yes, he believes there should be fair and balanced perspective presented in the media. But what he believes—and what many on his side believe—is that fairness should be determined by those of us in Government rather than the listeners and viewers who tune into that radio or the TV station or go to that Web site.

It is not for us to determine what is fair and balanced. His distortion about my amendment and what it does is exactly wrong. We do not address or change in any way the requirements of radio stations to act in the public interest. The nonsense about children's programming and indecency has nothing to do with this. It is another section in the law. I don't affect that in any way.

What this is about is, saying to your face, America, that they are not for reinstating the censorship of radio, while at the same time introducing an amendment that would allow us to go in and make our judgment, our opinion, about what is diverse ownership of a radio station.

Let me read again what this provision in my amendment addresses. He says it takes away the public interest clause. It has nothing to do with that. But it prohibits this backdoor approach to getting back to the principles of the fairness doctrine by saying broadcasters do not have to meet programming quotas and guidelines. In other words, we can't decide how many opinions they have to offer and what the guidelines for those opinions are. It is not for us to say. They have to fulfill their public interest obligations. We don't change that. But this clause would keep the good Senator from Illinois and those on his side who want to censor radio from allowing the FCC to go in and set some kind of quotas on how often, how they need to state their opinions, and the guidelines for that. It creates a license for us to go in and determine what opinions, how many opinions, and basically it is the fairness doctrine through the back door.

I will restate that this Broadcasters Freedom Act protects the constitutional rights of freedom of speech and freedom of the press. It does nothing to dislodge or change the requirement that public stations—radio or whatever communications—meet the current law requirements to act in the public good. But it does keep us, as a government, from setting quotas and guidelines of what opinions can be expressed and how often they can be expressed.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DEMINT. Yes.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. On that last point, am I correct in reaching the conclusion—and that second clause is prohibiting any similar requirement that broadcasters meet programming quotas or guidelines for issues of public importance—that you do not intend to affect or dislodge in any way existing FCC laws or guidelines with regard to, for instance, decency standards, language, or sexually loaded content, or violent content that currently prevails?

Mr. DEMINT. The Senator is right. We have legal opinions on that, and it doesn't overrule any existing commission regulations. We asked the broadcasters' legal counsel, and this is intended to narrow this fairness doctrine backdoor approach of controlling what people say by establishing quotas and guidelines about how that is done. I thank the Senator for that question.

We have probably talked enough about this subject. I reserve the remainder of my time. I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DEMINT. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DEMINT. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the time during the quorum call be equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DEMINT. I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VOINOVICH. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 587

Mr. VOINOVICH. Madam President, today I speak as a Member of the Senate, but also as a former chairman and now ranking member of the Oversight of Government Management, the Federal Workforce, and the District of Columbia Subcommittee. I have had a relationship with the District for quite some period of time and have been very interested in the District and also in the District's reaching out in terms of providing a quality education for the boys and girls who live in the District, understanding that this is the Nation's Capital and it should be the shining city on a hill where people can come from all over America and see the very best we have in our country in terms of educational opportunities and, I also feel, the opportunity of people to have the right to vote.

As a result of my concerns about the ways to rectify the lack of voting representation for the District, I have approached this bill with the belief that citizens who pay taxes and serve in the military should have House representation so long as such representation conforms to the Constitution.

Although a constitutional amendment would provide the clearest constitutional means to ensure District residents are provided House representation, after studying the legal arguments, I have concluded that there are sufficient indicia and precedent that the Constitution's District clause grants Congress the constitutional authority to give the District a House Member. As for any argument that the bill is unconstitutional, I need only to say that I believe any ambiguity and disagreement will be resolved quickly by the courts.

After weighing the constitutional arguments and equities, I have decided to support this legislation—in fact, I am a cosponsor of this legislation—on one condition: We must also continue to give the families of the District a vote on how their children are educated.

Accordingly, I am proud to join Senator ENSIGN in offering an amendment to reauthorize the District of Columbia Scholarship Program for an additional year. Perhaps one may wonder why am I so concerned about this issue. It is because of the fact that when I was Governor of Ohio, we started a scholarship program in Ohio for children who were not members of the public schools. That experiment has worked to the benefit of thousands of children, particularly in the Cleveland district, who have gone through the system and are now in college. I meet with them, and they tell me: Were it not for the Cleveland Scholarship Program where I had a choice to go to another school, I don't believe I would be in college today and be as successful as I have been.

When I instituted that program, it was said it was unconstitutional. I am pleased to say that several years ago, the U.S. Supreme Court said that providing scholarships to nonpublic school systems fit in with the Constitution of our country.

When we had an opportunity to help the District, we provided $14 million for public schools, $14 million for charters, and $14 million for the scholarship program. It is a critical component of a three-sector education strategy to provide a quality education to every child in the District, regardless of income or neighborhood.

The program provides up to $7,500 per student per year to fund tuition, fees, and transportation expenses for K-12 for low-income DC families.

To qualify, students must live in the District and have a household income of no more than 185 percent of the Federal poverty level. In 2008, that was about $39,000 per family of four. In fact, the average income for families using scholarships in 2008 was just over $24,000.

Since its inception, the program has served over 2,600 students. They have about 7,500 who would like to get in the program, but they do not have a place for them. Entering students had average math and reading test scores in the bottom third.

A recent evaluation of the Department of Education reaffirms academic gains among participants less than 2 years after receiving a scholarship. They are benefiting from it. We need more time to see how it works out. I wish to underscore that I think this is part of this whole package we put together.

Many Members of this body are unaware of the fact that today the people who live in the District can go to any public college in the United States and we provide up to $10,000 for out-of-State tuition. They are not aware of the fact that Don Graham over at the Washington Post got the business community together and set up the Washington scholarship program, the CAP program, and $2,500 is available for youngsters. Or that the Gates Foundation thinks so much of what is happening in the District that they provided another $120 million to keep kids in school in the two worst dropout districts in the District of Columbia.

There are some wonderful things happening in the District, and yet—and yet—there are some people here, because of special interest groups, who want to do away with the scholarship program. They want to deny these children an opportunity to have this educational opportunity, this smorgasbord we have available to them.

What this amendment does is it extends for 1 year that program as we look at it and see how it goes through its metamorphosis.

I have to say to my colleagues on the other side of the aisle and this side of the aisle, if you want to do something that is disastrous to the kids in the District in terms of public relations and the interest of all these people in the District, go ahead and make it impossible for this program to keep going.

Think about this: the Gates Foundation, the College Assistance Program—great things are happening in the District today. What a terrible message it would send to the rest of the country and those who care about education in the District if we were denied this opportunity, this experiment to continue in the District.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two editorials, one on January 26 titled "School Vouchers, District parents know why the program should continue." The demand for it is tremendous. They want it. And a recent editorial, "Hoping no one notices, congressional Democrats step between 1,800 DC children and a good education."

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Jan. 26, 2009]

SCHOOL VOUCHERS—DISTRICT PARENTS KNOW WHY THE PROGRAM SHOULD CONTINUE.

Early surveys of D.C. parents of children receiving federal school vouchers showed many of them liked the program because they believed their children were in safe schools. Over time, a new study shows, their satisfaction has deepened to include an appreciation for small class sizes, rich curricula and positive change in their sons and daughters. Above all, what parents most value is the freedom to choose where their children go to school.

Here, for example, is what one parent told University of Arkansas researchers studying the District's Opportunity Scholarship Program: "I know for a fact they would never have received this kind of education at a public school. . . . I listen to them when they talk, and what they are saying, and they articulate better than I do, and I know it's because of the school, and I like that about them, and I'm proud of them." Overall, researchers found that choice boosts parents' involvement in their children's education.

Whether they continue to have such a choice could be determined soon. The program that provides scholarships of up to $7,500 per year for low-income students to attend private schools is funded only through the 2009-10 school year. Unusually restrictive language being drafted for the omnibus budget bill would forbid any new funding unless Congress reauthorizes the program and the District passes legislation in agreement. Yet results of the Education Department's scientific study of the program are not expected until June.

We hope that, despite his stated reservations about vouchers, President Obama includes money in his upcoming budget to safeguard the interests of children in this important local program and to preserve an unusually rigorous research study. Mr. Obama and his education secretary, Arne Duncan, say they eschew ideology in favor of what serves the interests of children. Here's a chance to help 1,716 of them.

Congressional Democrats want to mandate that the District's unique school voucher program be reauthorized before more federal money can be allocated for it. It is a seemingly innocuous requirement. In truth it is an ill-disguised bid to kill a program that gives some poor parents a choice regarding where their children go to school. Many of the Democrats have never liked vouchers, and it seems they won't let fairness or the interests of low-income, minority children stand in the way of their politics. But it also seems they're too ashamed—and with good reason—to admit to what they're doing.

At issue is a provision in the 2009 omnibus spending bill making its way through Congress. The $410 billion package provides funds for the 2009-10 school year to the D.C. Opportunity Scholarship Program, a pioneering effort that awards scholarships of up to $7,500 a year for low-income students to attend private schools. But language inserted by Democrats into the bill stipulates that any future appropriations will require the reauthorization of the program by Congress and approval from the D.C. Council.

We have no problem with Congress taking a careful look at this initiative and weighing its benefits. After all, it was approved in 2004 as a pilot program, subject to study. In fact, this is the rare experimental program that has been carefully designed to produce comparative results. But the proposed Democratic provision would short-circuit this study. Results are not due until June, and an additional year of testing is planned. Operators of the program need to accept applications this fall for the 2010–11 school year, and reauthorizations are complicated, time-consuming affairs. Indeed, staff members on various House and Senate committees scoffed yesterday when we asked about the chances of getting such a program reauthorized in less than a year. Legislation seeking reauthorization has not even been introduced.

If the Democratic leadership is so worried about process, it might want to review a recent report from the Congressional Budget Office listing the hundreds of millions of dollars that have been appropriated to programs whose authorizations have expired. Many of these programs get far more than the $14 million allocated to the Opportunity Scholarships. House Minority Leader John A. Boehner (R-Ohio) was right to call out the Democrats for this back-door attempt to kill the voucher program. The attention should embarrass congressional Democrats into doing the right thing. If not, city leaders, including D.C. Mayor Adrian M. Fenty (D), need to let President Obama know that some 1,800 poor children are likely to have their educations disrupted.

Mr. VOINOVICH. Madam President, do you know why? It is because of the National Education Association. They do not want it to happen. They fought it in my State. The Ohio school boards fought it. I will never forget going up for an endorsement in 2004 when I ran last time. When I ran in 1998, I got support from the Ohio Education Society. They said: No Governor has done more for education than GEORGE VOINOVICH. So I came to Washington. They kind of forgave me for the scholarship program in Cleveland. They kind of let that go.

Madam President, 2004 came along, and I went through the whole endorsement procedure. I did everything. After it was over, many people came up to me and said: George, you absolutely did a fabulous job with your presentation, what you are trying to do with education on the national level and you are concerned about it. But we got the word from Washington that you are not going to be endorsed because you have broken the rule in supporting scholarships, supporting an opportunity for kids to have another opportunity to go to school and try something new.

I want to say this. In this country of ours, we cannot survive with half the kids in our urban districts dropping out of school. I am glad the President spoke about it in his State of the Union. I am glad the President talked about charter schools. But the real question is, Is he going to stand up and are the Democrats on the other side of the aisle and some Republicans going to stand up to the National Education Association, the National School Boards Association and some of these groups that want to keep things as they are?

I am going to tell you something, Madam President. We will never make it. I want everybody to understand that I am for this bill, voting rights, but I am not going to support this bill unless I am convinced we are going to have an opportunity to debate this issue in the Senate and keep this program going for the boys and girls who are benefiting from it, the same kind of program that benefited so many thousands of people in the State of Ohio.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Madam President, I thank my friend from Ohio. He speaks with such admirable passion about the needs of children who obviously are not his. He has a record on this issue. He knows, as I do, though, that some groups may disapprove, oppose this DC low-income student scholarship program. One group that doesn't oppose it—in fact, enthusiastically supports it—is the parents of low-income children in the District who have oversubscribed by multiples for this program every year.

We are going to have conversations during this discussion. I support this program, as my friend from Ohio knows. Hopefully, we can get to a point where we can have an agreement that will get some floor time for this discussion. As I said earlier, since the Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee has tucked within it jurisdiction over matters related to the District of Columbia, we would, I believe, be the authorizing committee.

I am certainly committed to holding a hearing on the reauthorization bill. The Senator from Ohio rightly wants to guarantee by one means or another that there will be floor debate on this issue in a timely way; that is, so that we can consider it in plenty of time for the DC school system to act.

Most of all, I tell him I admire the strength of his position because it is a position that cares for children. It is not against anything. It is for a good education for all our children. I thank him. I admire him.

I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. UDALL of Colorado). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BROWN. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BUY AMERICA

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, we are in the worst recession since the Great Depression. We have been in a recession in my State longer than the official 13 months that economists have noted. With the economic recovery package signed into law last week, we took a major step toward getting our economy on the path for success and toward rebuilding and strengthening the Nation's middle class. The economic recovery package means billions of dollars to help shore up State budgets and help States pay for essential programs such as Medicaid and unemployment insurance. The economic recovery package means money for job-creating efforts from shovel-ready projects to long-term investment in new technology.

In this economic crisis, we have seen demand for manufactured goods slow to a crawl. Coupled with the unavailability of credit, many manufacturers have ceased or idled operations. American manufacturing shed 800,000 jobs last year, nearly one-third of all job losses. Last week many people probably missed the bad news on manufacturing released by the Federal Reserve. The Fed reported that output in manufacturing fell 2.5 percent in January. That means manufacturing lost 207,000 jobs in January alone. That is on top of manufacturing falling nearly 3 percent in December. This puts manufacturing's decline over the last 3 months at a shocking 26.7 percent.

That is why this recovery package is so important. The recovery package has two key objectives: stimulate the economy and create jobs. The Government is investing billions of tax dollars in infrastructure, in safety net programs and alternative energy development. It is common sense to ensure that Federal funds for this recovery are used to buy American products and to help promote manufacturing and job creation.

Studies across the board say more jobs are created when we have strong domestic sourcing requirements. One recent study estimates 33 percent more manufacturing jobs will be created with "Buy America". When we utilize domestically manufactured goods, the more jobs we will create and the greater the stimulus will be to our economy, an economy that has been the engine of growth for the world. The American people clearly have spoken out that they want this "Buy America" provision. "Buy America" is common sense. The majority of Americans know that. Some 84 percent favored strong "Buy America" provisions in the stimulus.

Last week in Cleveland I visited ArcelorMittal Steel, a steel manufacturer that employs lots of people but is a foreign-owned company. I met with the plant manager and his staff. I met with union workers, including some who were recently laid off. This company, similar to all steel companies, is down 45 percent of its capacity. They are forced to lay off workers because the demand for steel has declined—steel for autos, steel for household appliances, steel for infrastructure projects. We talked about "Buy America" provisions and how that can help the plant get up and running again. It is important to note that ArcelorMittal is an international company. Its headquarters is not located in the United States. Yet that company believes "Buy America" provisions make sense, a foreign-based company that supports "Buy America" provisions in the recovery package. There are more foreign-based companies with American factories such as ArcelorMittal that can benefit from the stimulus. I hope "Buy America," if properly implemented and properly enforced, will help manufacturers such as ArcelorMittal and even attract new foreign investment in the United States. We need to make sure these provisions are properly implemented. We need to make sure that when a State or local government requests a waiver on "Buy America" provisions, the agency makes the request known. We need transparency so that, at the very least, the taxpayers know if dollars are going to domestic or foreign manufacturers.

There are good reasons on occasion to have waivers. Sometimes domestic steel or iron or cement might be too costly for a project to make sense. Sometimes the right product in the right quantity may not be available at the right time. Waivers are fine if implemented correctly, fairly, and with transparency. But that has not always been the case. Since 2001, the Federal Highway Administration has granted 54 "Buy America" waivers. The Federal Transit Administration has granted more than 40 waivers. Most were granted based on the product not being available in the United States. When the waiver request is not known by anyone except the Federal agency that receives it, how do we know the products are not made in America? Waivers can be fine but not if they are granted without transparency. We have a responsibility to the taxpayer to ensure that these dollars are creating American jobs.

Americans, whether they are in Denver or Columbus, have supported "Buy America" in large numbers. We know that, when the President spoke down the hall in the House about this stimulus package and about our efforts. We also know, if we are going to ask Americans to reach into their pockets and spend tens of millions of dollars on infrastructure projects, as Americans have said they would, we also need to know this will create the jobs we promised.

The American people want three things: Accountability, which we give in this package; they want to know that this infrastructure is done by American workers; and they want to know their tax dollars are used to buy materials made in America for these projects that American workers are building.

We have a responsibility to give American manufacturers the opportunity to bid on the steel and iron and cement and the concrete that will be in demand for these massive investments. "Buy America" is significant because it helps ensure we have a diverse and strong manufacturing base.

Textbook trade theory says that making companies more and more specialized in one sector is an unquestionable good, but that is not always true. We have seen countries such as Great Britain overspecialize in finance while neglecting manufacturing. Some might say that has happened here. The people screaming bloody murder about "Buy America" are the same people who oversold the benefits of free trade. These are entrenched interests, companies that, for instance, outsource their manufacturing, move their manufacturing plants abroad. They import products back into the United States, and they use cheap labor. That is so much of the story. In opposing "Buy America," companies would say: We want to be able to sell our products overseas. That is not the real story. The real story is these companies want to outsource their production to China, use very inexpensive labor, take advantage of no worker safety rules in China, take advantage of very weak environmental rules in China, make those products there and then import them back into the United States, outsource the jobs to China, make the products there, and bring the products back to the United States. We know what that does to American employment. We also know what it does for food safety, toy safety, vitamins, all the things we have seen, contaminants in the food and toys. We cannot afford this any longer. We cannot be a healthy economy without strong manufacturing. A healthy economy is a balanced one, not overly dependent on one sector.

Let me be clear. "Buy America" is not about slowing international trade. The editorial boards and pundits may scream trade war when the Congress considers how it will spend taxpayer dollars, but there is no danger of a trade war. There is no danger of protectionism. We are a country with the most open markets in the world. We are a country with an $800 billion trade deficit, $2 billion a day going out of the country rather than money coming into the country. How can we be called protectionist when we have that policy?

The United States will continue to have the most open market in the world, and we should. The United States is a signatory to the World Trade Organization and other trade deals that actually limit policies that countries can use on things such as "Buy America" or on climate change or on food and product safety. That, in itself, is a subject matter for further debate.

This is about using tax dollars in the best way to create jobs in Illinois, Colorado, and in Ohio. Now that the provisions are in the bill, Congress will work with the Obama administration in implementing them with transparency and accountability. It is the right thing to do. It will put Americans back to work. Americans demand that their tax dollars be spent on American workers using American products to build this infrastructure to make a better economy.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, the fairness doctrine was repealed by the FCC over 20 years ago. I do not support its reinstatement because I don't like the idea of the government micromanaging speech. I also have serious questions about whether it would be constitutional to reinstate the fairness doctrine, given the wide variety of media outlets available for the expression of different points of view. That is why I voted for the amendment offered by Senator DEMINT banning the fairness doctrine.

Unfortunately, that amendment was drafted so broadly that it could have also restricted the FCC from encouraging localism and ensuring that broadcasters are living up to their public interest responsibilities. These are responsibilities that broadcasters agree to when they are provided a segment of spectrum—a valuable piece of public property—and they should not be undone. I supported the Durbin amendment to clarify that public interest obligations remain, while ensuring that the fairness doctrine does not return.

Mr. DORGAN. My vote on the DeMint amendment, No. 573, should not be construed as a vote in favor of restoring the fairness doctrine. I do not favor restoring the fairness doctrine.

However, the DeMint amendment went much further than legislating on the fairness doctrine. His amendment would have prohibited the FCC from establishing any program guidelines at all no matter how reasonable. For example, his amendment would have prohibited the FCC from establishing guidelines for children's programs or guidelines to prohibit violent programming during a family viewing hour in the evening. These are just two examples that the DeMint amendment would have prohibited.

To be clear, I support the provision in the DeMint amendment that would have precluded the restoration of the fairness doctrine. My view is that the fairness doctrine is not appropriate for today's market. I do support the creation of reasonable public interest standards that attach to a broadcast license dealing with localism issues and community responsibility. But, I could not vote for such a broad amendment that would have stripped from FCC reasonable and appropriate regulation of the type described above.

AMENDMENT NO. 591

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BENNET). The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DURBIN. It is my understanding the vote is scheduled for 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DURBIN. I ask unanimous consent that it be moved until 2 minutes after 2 and I be allowed to speak and there be response.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, before us is a debate on the fairness doctrine. Sixty years ago, the Federal Communications Commission said radio and TV stations had to tell Americans both sides of the story. In those days, television was just starting. In the 1950s, three networks emerged and the fairness doctrine applied for decades. Then, in 1987, the FCC canceled the fairness doctrine, and there has been a debate ever since whether we should return to it.

Well, if you want to argue whether Americans should hear both sides of every story to make up their minds, I think it is a pretty basic concept. But while we were debating whether to return to the fairness doctrine, media and technology changed dramatically. It is no longer three networks, it is 200 channels, cable channels, and all sorts of opportunities for information.

So the fairness doctrine in its day was the right thing for the right reason. Today it is not. Senator DEMINT wants to eliminate it—make sure no one brings it back. No one is planning on bringing it back. There is no problem with that. But he included some language in his amendment that goes too far. It takes away the authority of the Federal Communications Commission to basically determine that radio and TV stations use their Federal licenses in the public interest. What does that mean?

It means the FCC can tell a television station it cannot put on a violent movie early on Saturday morning when kids are tuning in to cartoons. It cannot put on something with sexual tones to it at a time when children and family are watching. There are limitations because it is using America's airwaves to make money. Use them responsibly in the public interest. I think it was inadvertent, but, in fact, he removed that. He removed that authority of the FCC.

My amendment says two things. It is the first amendment we will vote on. First, the existing statutory requirement for diversity in media ownership is going to be encouraged so we have more and more different people applying for licenses for radio and TV stations. There is nothing wrong with that, as I see it. It is already in the law. Secondly, do not take away the FCC's power to say to public licensees of television and radio: Operate in the public interest. Make sure you have local news and weather. Make sure you do not have sexual content and violence on children's shows—basic things that are common sense.

I do not think the Senator from South Carolina wanted to change that. He did inadvertently. My amendment cleans it up. If the Durbin amendment is adopted, I encourage people to support both the Durbin amendment and the DeMint amendment. If my amendment is not adopted, I hope they will reconsider their support for Senator DEMINT's amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The Republican leader is recognized.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I am going to proceed for a few moments on leader time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, in recent months, a number of our colleagues on the other side of the aisle have expressed support for reinstating the so-called fairness doctrine. But let's be honest. The fairness doctrine was anything but fair. It amounted to Government control over political speech, and in the end it actually resulted in less, not more, political discourse over the airwaves because broadcasters did not want to deal with all of its redtape. That is precisely why the Federal Communications Commission repealed it back in 1987, and why we must keep it from being reinstated now.

The reality behind this so-called fairness doctrine is that some of my friends on the other side do not like what they are hearing on the radio these days. So instead of addressing the criticisms head on, they want to silence them.

Americans will not stand for that, and we will not let it happen. Government is not the speech police, and I will not support—and I am confident the American people do not support—efforts to restrict free speech.

The Founding Fathers enshrined the right to free speech in the very first amendment to the Constitution because they knew it was fundamental—that it was the one right without which the others would lose their force. They also knew future generations would have to continue to defend that right from those who viewed it as an obstacle to their goals.

We should adopt the DeMint amendment to kill the so-called fairness doctrine once and for all.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 591 offered by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. DURBIN. I announce that the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

NOT VOTING—1

The amendment (No. 591) was agreed to.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 573

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There will now be 2 minutes of debate, equally divided, before a vote in relation to amendment No. 573 offered by the Senator from South Carolina. Who yields time?

The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DEMINT. Mr. President, if I could have my colleagues' attention for just a moment, I think this should be an easy vote for all of us. President Obama has expressed his opposition to the fairness doctrine. Senator DURBIN has expressed his opposition to the fairness doctrine. This amendment, the Broadcasters Freedom Act, prohibits the Federal Communications Commission from implementing all or part of the fairness doctrine, which has been repealed.

I wish to clear up one misunderstanding that has been stated on the other side. This amendment does not affect the public interest requirements of broadcast radio. It does not change children's programming or opposition to indecency. What it does is, it prohibits quotas and guidelines on programming, which is another way to prohibit the implementation of the fairness doctrine.

While the fairness doctrine is a direct and obvious method to burden and chill broadcaster speech, there are also several indirect ways that are not as well-known, but no less available to proponents of limiting the freedom of our national media.

Last year's FCC Localism Notice of Proposed Rulemaking—MB Docket No. 04-233, released January 24, 2008, "Localism Notice"—contained a number of "tentative conclusions" that, if adopted, would result in greater regulation of broadcaster speech.

First, the FCC proposed to reintroduce license renewal processing "guidelines" that would measure specific categories of speech aired by broadcasters. The guidelines would pressure broadcasters to air Commission-specified amounts of programming in Commission-defined program categories. Although the Localism Notice does not specify which categories broadcasters would be measured by, political programming, public affairs programming, and local news are mentioned as possible types of programming to be regulated. Broadcasters that do not meet the thresholds to the Commission's satisfaction would risk losing their license to broadcast.

While ostensibly the renewal processing guidelines are meant to increase the total amount of local programming, the adjective "local" is ill-defined in this proceeding. It could be expanded to include an almost limitless array of speech and could shift with the political winds.

My amendment, DeMint No. 573, would not eliminate the FCC's power to develop license renewal processing guidelines completely, but only its authority to develop processing guidelines that mimic its past authority under the fairness doctrine, hence the language which limits it to quotas or guidelines for issues of public importance.

The second way in which the Commission has proposed to indirectly regulate broadcaster speech is by return of ascertainment requirements, which would mandate that every broadcaster develop and meet with an "advisory board" made up of community groups and local officials that would "inform the stations' programming decisions." This proposal would make broadcasters very vulnerable to pressure or even harassment by groups that do not approve of their programming.

A similar ascertainment requirement was eliminated in the early 1980s after the Commission determined that the rule did more to create bureaucratic burdens than it did to improve broadcasting.

Like the processing guidelines, the ascertainment requirement could become a factor for broadcasters at license renewal. Groups that feel a local broadcaster did not listen to their suggestions through the advisory board—suggestions to, for example, air more programming that addresses whatever social or political issue is of concern to these groups—could challenge the broadcasters' license and argue that the broadcaster ignored the "needs and interests" of their local community. Talk radio would be particularly vulnerable to this type of harassment, as would religious broadcasters.

Again, my amendment, DeMint No. 573, would not eliminate the Commission's authority to mandate ascertainment completely, but only its authority to mandate that broadcasters seek out opposing viewpoints on "issues of public importance."

I encourage all of my colleagues to support this amendment.

NOT VOTING—1

The amendment (No. 573) was agreed to.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote, and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I have a unanimous consent request that has been agreed to on both sides. It is as follows: I ask unanimous consent that amendments Nos. 579 and 587 be withdrawn and that when the Senate resumes consideration of the Ensign amendment No. 575, the second-degree amendment No. 576 be withdrawn; that there then be 30 minutes of debate prior to a vote in relation to the Ensign amendment, with no amendment in order to the amendment prior to a vote, with the time equally divided and controlled between Senators ENSIGN and FEINSTEIN or their designees; and further, that Senator FEINSTEIN's 15 minutes begin at 3:30 p.m.; that at 3:45 p.m., the Senate proceed to vote in relation to amendment No. 575; that upon disposition of amendment No. 575, no further amendments be in order; that the substitute amendment, as amended, be agreed to, the bill, as amended, be read a third time, and the Senate proceed to vote on passage of the bill; that passage of the bill be subject to a 60-vote threshold; that if the bill achieves that threshold, then the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; provided further that the cloture motion be withdrawn, with this addendum: that 2 minutes of Senator ENSIGN's time be reserved to occur at 3:45 p.m., with the vote occurring with respect to Ensign amendment No. 575 following Senator ENSIGN's 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 579 WITHDRAWN

Mr. THUNE. Mr. President, I had filed an amendment and have pending at the desk amendment No. 579, which is a concealed carry amendment. I talked about it yesterday on the floor of the Senate. I would like to have had a vote on it and certainly believe it is something the Senate ought to consider. It is worth voting on.

My State of South Dakota is one of many States around the country that has concealed carry laws. What my amendment simply would have done is allowed those who have concealed carry permits in a particular State to have reciprocity with other States that have concealed carry laws, respectful of the laws of those other States, but it would have allowed people of this country under the second amendment to exercise the individual right to carry firearms insofar as they are adhering and following the laws of the State not only in which they reside but the State in which they would be carrying that firearm. That is something for which I think there is a lot of support.

I introduced a bill in the Senate. It has 19 cosponsors. As I said, I offered the amendment to this particular piece of legislation. My understanding is the other side does not want to vote on it. What I have tried to ascertain is whether the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the Senator from Vermont, Mr. LEAHY, would be willing to hold a hearing. He informs me he will do that. I will have a hearing on the bill itself.

With that understanding, Mr. President, my intention is to withdraw amendment No. 579 and hope that we will have an opportunity to consider it at some point at a future date.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been withdrawn.

The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I thank my friend from South Dakota. I just want to say as a manager of the bill, I was present at the conversation with Senator LEAHY, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and Senator THUNE. The conversation was exactly as reported.

Senator LEAHY could not be here because he had other pressing business, but he asked me to represent to our colleagues that the Judiciary Committee will hold a hearing on the amendment offered by Senator THUNE and now withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, the last amendment is going to be debated soon. Senator ENSIGN is here to begin that debate.

Both Senator MCCONNELL and I would like to make some brief remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

AMENDMENT NO. 575

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, I wish to take a little bit of time to refute some of the inaccuracies about my amendment dealing with the repeal of the gun ban in the District of Columbia. This really is about restoring second amendment rights to residents who live here in the District of Columbia. We have a constitutional right and duty to deal with matters dealing with the District of Columbia.

Last year, the Supreme Court ruled that the laws that had been passed by the city council in the District of Columbia were in fact unconstitutional because the District of Columbia did not recognize there was a constitutional right to the individual—not just a militia but to the individual—to keep and bear arms. Since then, the District of Columbia has attempted to subvert what the Supreme Court said by putting very burdensome types of laws to make it more and more difficult for District residents to own a gun in order to protect themselves in their own homes.

It is interesting. If you go back to what the Founders talked about, as far as the second amendment, look at James Madison. He wrote in Federalist No. 46:

... the advantage of being armed, which the Americans possess over the people of almost every other nation ... forms a barrier against the enterprises of ambition, more insurmountable than any which a simple government of any form can admit of.

Washington, DC, has blatantly violated this right for more than 30 years, and it has led to catastrophic results. This chart reflects the murder rates in Washington, DC, relative to 48 other of the largest cities, excluding Chicago, from the top 50 list. And this is all weighted by population. You can see here, and especially as we go forward, when other crime rates in the country were actually going down and murder rates in the country were going down, as Washington, DC, was enacting more and more gun ban laws and stricter gun ban laws, the murder rate in Washington, DC, continued to rise.

It has been characterized that this bill would allow a 10-year-old to carry shotguns in the streets of Washington, DC. That is completely ridiculous. That is a scare tactic. Our amendment basically ensures the individual's second amendment right. It removes the tremendous barriers and burdens on law-abiding citizens to be able to have the protection they want, to protect themselves in their own homes.

Right now, we know that if a criminal in Washington, DC, wants to get a gun, they will get a gun. We are making it difficult for the people who actually abide by the law to get a gun. We want law-abiding citizens to have the arms, not just the criminals. That is what this amendment is really all about.

You are probably going to hear some people say that Washington, DC, is just trying, within the Supreme Court decision, to enact laws that will put reasonable restrictions on guns. I would say that is not the case, and the reason it is not the case is they are actually trying to make technical changes in the law which they think will restrict people's rights to keep and bear arms. It is going against the intent of what the Supreme Court has enacted.

People across the United States have recognized for a long time how important it is for individuals to be able to keep and bear arms.

Around the world, we often hear asked: Well, why does Great Britain have a lower murder rate than the United States? Well, first of all, there are a lot of cultural differences between the United States and Great Britain. But also, since Great Britain enacted some of its strictest gun control laws, murder rates have actually gone up in London.

In case after case where you look to find out whether gun control laws actually are effective in reducing crime, the statistics are pretty overwhelming against it. Criminals will get the guns. They get them on the black market or they go someplace, but they get their guns. The question is, Are law-abiding citizens going to be able to protect themselves in their own homes?

That is what this amendment is attempting to do, to say to citizens who live in the District of Columbia: We are going to protect your second amendment rights. The laws the District of Columbia has enacted to own a gun are stricter than what we require in Nevada to get a concealed weapons permit.

Mr. President, I believe it is high time this body give the citizens who live in the District of Columbia that second amendment right to keep and bear arms in order to protect themselves in their own homes, so I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. President, I will save a couple of minutes right before the vote to be able to conclude my remarks, but how much time remains on my side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is 9 minutes remaining.

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I rise now for the second time in strong opposition to Senator ENSIGN's amendment. This is a dangerous amendment that goes far beyond anything the Supreme Court contemplated in the Heller decision. If you have been committed to a mental institution, if you can't pass a vision test, this forces the District of Columbia to still allow you to have a gun. That doesn't make any sense.

Americans basically believe in the Heller decision, which says there is a right to bear arms in the Constitution. But Americans have the good sense to know that no amendment is absolute. We put limitations on the first amendment—libel laws, pornography; you can't falsely scream "fire" in a crowded theater. We put limits on every other amendment. Why is it that some in the gun lobby say there should be no limitation on the second amendment? They support limitations on the first amendment. I am sure most of them feel antipornography laws are justified.

Just as those on the left, I believe, are wrong to say the first amendment should be broad, the fourth amendment should be broad, the fifth amendment should be broad, but the second amendment should be seen through the pinhole of only militias, those on the other side are equally wrong when they do the converse and say the first amendment should be narrow, the fourth amendment should be narrow, the fifth amendment should be narrow, but the second amendment should have almost no limitation.

Isn't it reasonable to say that someone who has been in a mental institution shouldn't automatically get a gun? Isn't it reasonable to say that if someone fails a vision test, they should not automatically get a gun? Of course it is. But because we get into sort of a macho game here of, hey, we are going to show there should be no limitations on the second amendment, we end up hearing about fundamentally absurd propositions that those who fail vision tests should be allowed a gun. It defies common sense to say that someone who is voluntarily committed to a mental institution should be allowed to get a gun. In fact, limitations on access to guns by the mentally ill was one of the few things Justice Scalia, a strong second amendment supporter, specifically said would be okay after Heller.

Let me just say to my colleagues, we are only a few years after Virginia Tech and the pain and tragedy for the parents who anguish every day for their lost sons and daughters. They came to us and lobbied us and said: Please just pass minimal laws to prevent those who are mentally ill from getting a gun. Now we are saying that in the District of Columbia that will be OK.

As for the vision, there cannot be a more reasonable restriction than the requirement that someone see before they are allowed on the streets with a gun. We wouldn't want that in our communities where we live. Why would we impose it on the District of Columbia? The District of Columbia has the highest per capita homicide rate in the United States. I understand, if you are from, say, Wyoming—there are broad, open spaces, very low crime rate—that the rules on guns should be different than the rules in Washington, DC and New York City. I understand that. I accept it, as someone who has been an advocate of gun control.

But why are we imposing those laws that may work in Wyoming on the people of the District of Columbia? Firearms cause more needless damage in Washington, DC than anywhere else. The Heller decision made it clear that Washington, DC could impose reasonable restrictions on the right to bear arms and that was perfectly consonant with the Constitution. Every Justice of the Supreme Court, including those who are the most conservative, such as Justice Scalia, such as Justice Thomas, believe there can be some limitation imposed. Because the NRA does not, too many in this country, and in this Chamber, jump when they say so.

It is wrong. It makes people's lives less safe. It is unfortunate. I hope this body will have the courage to reject the Ensign amendment while still affirming the right to bear arms as certified in the Heller case.

I yield the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise to support final passage of S. 160, the District of Columbia House Voting Rights Act.

I have spoken and written many times about my conclusion that the Constitution allows Congress to provide a House seat for the people of the District of Columbia.

And I have said for more than 30 years that Americans living in the District should have all the rights of citizenship, including voting rights.

The bill would also give an additional seat temporarily to the State next qualifying for one under the 2000 census.

I believe the bill before us is a constitutional and balanced way to achieve these important goals.

Article I, section 2, states that the House shall be composed of Members elected by the "People of the several States."

The District did not yet exist when those words were drafted.

The observation that this provision does not itself provide a House seat for the people of the District begs rather than answers the constitutional question.

That question is whether the House Composition Clause prohibits Congress from providing for the people of the District what the Constitution provides for the people of the States.

The Constitution uses the word "States" in various provisions.

Opponents of this bill have argued that some of those cannot include the District.

Once again, that observation begs rather than answers the constitutional question.

For more than two centuries, the Supreme Court has held that other provisions framed in terms of "States" can indeed apply to the District.

Or, even more relevant to the bill before us today, the Supreme Court has ruled that Congress can legislatively do for the District what the Constitution does for States.

I believe the House Composition Clause falls in this category.

The Supreme Court has held, for example, that Congress could apply to the District the direct taxes that the original Constitution apportioned among the several States.

Opponents of the bill before us have not even attempted to explain why the phrase "the several States" can apply to the District, which is obviously not a State, but the phrase "the People of the several States" cannot apply to the District, which obviously has population.

The Supreme Court has held that Congress can extend to the District Federal court jurisdiction over lawsuits by citizens of different States.

The great Chief Justice John Marshall wrote in 1805 that while the Constitution does itself extend such diversity jurisdiction to the District, "this is a subject for legislative . . . consideration."

He added that the contrary conclusion, which I take to be the position of those opposing the bill before us today, would be simply extraordinary.

Those opponents have not even attempted to explain why extending diversity jurisdiction to the District is a subject for legislative consideration but extending House representation to the people of the District is not.

The Supreme Court has held that Congress can extend to the District the restrictions the fourteenth amendment imposes upon the States.

Once again, the Court suggested that Congress's plenary authority over the District would be a sufficient basis for such legislation.

Opponents of S. 160 have cited the decision in Adams v. Clinton for the proposition that the Constitution does not provide a right to congressional representation for the District.

I agree.

That decision did not say, however, that Congress was precluded from doing so.

In fact, the court said the opposite.

The court in Adams said that while it lacked authority to grant such representation in the name of the Constitution, the plaintiffs could "plead their case in other venues," including "the political process."

That is precisely what the bill before us represents and opponents of S. 160 have not even attempted to explain otherwise.

Let me repeat, the constitutional question is not whether the Constitution itself grants House representation to the people of the District. It does not.

The constitutional question is whether Congress may, under its explicit and plenary authority over the District, legislatively provide for the people of the District what the Constitution provides for the people of the States.

Those who say that the word "States" necessarily excludes the District must at least try to show that the many judicial precedents saying otherwise either were wrongly decided or are somehow irrelevant to this bill. They have not even attempted to do either.

I believe that the foundational principle of representation and suffrage, the legislative actions by America's Founders, two centuries of judicial precedent, and Congress's explicit legislative authority over the District in all cases whatsoever combine to allow Congress to enact the bill before us today.

One of my predecessors as a Senator from Utah, George Sutherland, was later appointed to the Supreme Court.

He wrote for the Court in 1933 what I believe is relevant to this debate today:

The District [of Columbia] was made up of portions of two states of the original states of the Union, and was not taken out of the Union by the cession. Prior thereto its inhabitants were entitled to all the rights, guarantees, and immunities of the Constitution. . . . We think it is not reasonable to assume that the cession stripped them of those rights.

More than 30 years ago, I made the same argument on this floor and later argued that one way to achieve this goal was by giving the people of the District representation in the House.

The defeat of the retrocession amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona showed that the underlying bill is the only legislative vehicle for providing this representation.

I voted for that amendment as a vote on the idea of retrocession, which I find has some general merit.

Even with my vote, however, the Senate resoundingly defeated it.

So I urge the Senate to pass this bill.

It constitutionally gives one House seat to the people of the District.

It fairly gives another seat to the State qualifying for one under the last census.

It explicitly and implicitly disclaims Senate representation for the District.

It provides for expedited judicial review.

In short, I believe this is a sound and fair way to strengthen our system of self-government so that Americans can exercise the most precious right available in a free country, the right to participate in electing those who govern us.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I am pleased to support this bill, and congratulate the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Utah for their tireless efforts. Senator LIEBERMAN and Senator HATCH have put forward innovative, bipartisan legislation that will strengthen our democracy. I also want to recognize the contribution of the majority leader, who, by championing this issue, renews and fulfills our country's commitment to equality, democracy, and justice.

When I watch my colleagues on the floor today, I see the spirit of Paul Douglas, Hubert Humphrey, and Everett Dirksen. This legislation is part of the struggle to fulfill the promise of America that led to the landmark civil rights bills of 1957, 1964, and 1965. Today, we follow in the footsteps of some of our greatest predecessors. We are here to right a historic wrong, to enfranchise hundreds of thousands of our fellow Americans by giving them a vote in Congress.

The struggle to give Washington, DC, a vote in the House of Representatives has already been historic. I was disappointed that the Senate was the graveyard for this bill in 2007. By using a filibuster to prevent the bill from even reaching the floor at that time, opponents of this bill recalled history, too—an unfortunate history we should not revisit. I am sure that I do not need to remind anyone here that for decades the Senate was an implacable bulwark that no civil rights bill could breach. Unfortunately, when this great institution was faced a year and a half ago with a new kind of voting rights bill, it did not rise to the challenge.

Now we have a chance to correct this breach of American principles and pass the District of Columbia House Voting Rights Act of 2009. And so now is the time to remedy the injustice being done to Americans residing in the District of Columbia, and stop this violation of their fundamental rights. Now is the time to take action on this legislation and to finally give the disenfranchised District at least a partial say in the decisions of the Congress, to make the "People's House" a body that truly represents all of the people of this Nation.

In 1964, the Supreme Court stated that "[n]o right is more precious in a free country than that of having a voice in the election of those who make the laws under which, as good citizens, we must live." It is time for Congress to live up to those words. At a time when Americans whose families wait for them at home in the District are fighting for our country overseas, it is a cruel and bitter irony that their own country denies them the right to representation in the House.

With all of the difficult issues and momentous decisions facing this Congress, the people of DC deserve a voice in it, now more than ever. As of February 14, 29 DC residents have been killed or wounded in Iraq or Afghanistan, wars that their elected representative had no say in commencing or funding. Approximately 1,500 homes are in foreclosure or pre-foreclosure, unemployment has gone up over 3 percent in the last year, to 8.8 percent. Just like all other Americans, the residents of the District want to participate in the crucial and difficult debates this Congress is having over foreign and economic policy. They want to set a new course for this country. Their voices should count just as much as their fellow citizens'.

Opponents of this bill have asserted that it is unconstitutional. I chaired a Judiciary Committee hearing in May 2007 to examine whether the Constitution, perhaps the greatest testament to democracy and freedom in human history, prevents the elected legislature of the people of this country from granting the most basic right of citizenship to the people of the District of Columbia. The hearing confirmed that while this is not an easy question of constitutional interpretation, there are strong arguments for the bill's constitutionality. Our conclusions were strengthened by the finding of the Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs that Congress's authority to legislatively extend House representation is supported by two centuries of judicial precedent.

In light of the historic wrong that this bill will correct, the case for its constitutionality is certainly strong enough to justify enacting it and letting the Supreme Court make the final decision. The Constitution grants Congress the power of "exclusive legislation, in all cases whatsoever," over the District; I believe that we can use that authority to ensure that this Government's just powers are derived from the consent of the governed. Moreover, the basic sweep of the Constitution, its very essence, is to protect the fundamental rights of the citizens of this country, including the right to be represented in Congress.

The other fundamental document of our founding, the Declaration of Independence, laid out a list of grievances against the King of Great Britain, including the following:

He has refused to pass other Laws for the Accommodation of large Districts of People, unless those People would relinquish the Right of Representation in the Legislature, a Right inestimable to them, and formidable to Tyrants only.

That inestimable right has been denied to the residents of the District of Columbia for far too long.

We in Congress have a duty to fulfill the promise of democracy for DC residents. Those who rely on constitutional arguments to oppose this bill should ask themselves what the Framers would think today, if they were faced with the question of whether their handiwork should be used to prevent Congress from granting over a half million people the most basic right in a democracy—the right of representation in the legislature. It is simply inconceivable to me that those great and brave patriots would be comfortable with such a blatant injustice.

I hope that we finally have the votes to right this historic wrong. I urge my colleagues to support the District of Columbia House Voting Rights Act of 2009, and grant the most basic of democratic rights to the people of the District.

Mr. CORNYN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent a Washington Times article by George Smith on February 13, 2009; testimony by John P. Elwood, Deputy Assistant Attorney General before the Subcommittee on the Constitution, Civil Rights, and Property Rights, Senate Committee on the Judiciary on May 23, 2007; and a Statement of Administration Policy from September 18, 2007, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Times, Feb. 13, 2009]

NOT ON CONSTITUTION AVENUE

(By George C. Smith)

As the Obama administration commences its reign of one-party government, attention has understandably focused on the president's economic stimulus program and his new approach to the foreign terrorist threat.

But preoccupation with these topics should not divert attention from what may be the most ominous, and radical, collaboration between the new president and the Democratic-controlled Congress: the enactment of blatantly unconstitutional legislation to bypass the constitutional amendment process and give the District of Columbia a seat in the House of Representatives in a crass triumph of raw political power over the rule of law.

With relentless clarity, in provision after provision, the Constitution specifies that representation in both Houses of Congress is limited to the states—and the District of Columbia is not a state. The very first sentence of the Constitution says, "All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States"—not a Congress of the United Entities, Districts, Territories or Enclaves. The second sentence then specifies that the House of Representatives is to be composed of members "chosen by the people of the several States." All told, no fewer than 11 constitutional provisions make it clear that congressional representation is linked inextricably to statehood.

If there were any plausible doubt that congressional representation was intentionally limited to the states when the Constitution was drafted in 1787, it would have been conclusively removed when the 39th Congress reiterated that "Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States" when it revisited the question of congressional apportionment in drafting the 14th Amendment in 1866. (In 1866 as well as in 1787, there was no ambiguity and no mistake in the express linkage of congressional representation to statehood.)

This does not mean, however, that the District of Columbia cannot obtain congressional representation. It only means it must do so by means of a constitutional amendment, as plainly provided in Article V of the Constitution.

For more than 200 years, this understanding of the Constitution (intelligible to any literate 12-year-old who reads its text) was accepted even by ardent advocates of D.C. representation. On repeated occasions in the 1960s and 1970s, for example, the Democratic-controlled House Judiciary Committee ruefully acknowledged that a constitutional amendment was "essential" if D.C. were to receive such representation. They expressly recognized that the Constitution did not allow Congress to grant D.C. representation by simple legislation, and proceeded to propose the constitutional amendment that was necessary. The amendment failed to achieve ratification, but the rule of law was honored.

The constitutional text limiting congressional representation to the states has not changed during the past several years. Nor have judicial interpretations of that text, which have consistently acknowledged that limitation. What has changed, however, is the willingness of D.C. representation advocates to run roughshod over the Constitution because they now have the raw political power to pass a statute awarding the District a seat in the House by main force.

As a fig leaf to cover up their brute power play, they invoke the risible theory that a constitutional provision authorizing Congress to exercise legislative jurisdiction over federal enclaves—including the District, but also including military reservations, park lands and similar enclaves—enables Congress to override express constitutional requirements, including the limitation of congressional representation to states, as long as they are doing so on behalf of the District. Oddly, this interpretation of the Enclave Clause somehow escaped the grasp of the Framers, the courts, and Congress for more than two centuries.

Apart from the fact that the Supreme Court has flatly held that Congress' power under the Enclave Clause is indeed limited by other constitutional requirements, the absurdity of the theory is demonstrated by considering its logical consequences. It would enable Congress to undercut the entire structure of state-based congressional representation—in the Senate as well as in the House—by extending representation to an unlimited variety of enclaves and territories by simply passing statutes reflecting evanescent political majorities. A more radical subversion of constitutional government would be difficult to imagine.

During the 110th Congress, it was only President Bush's veto threat, and a razor-thin sufficiency of Republican Senate votes to sustain a filibuster, that prevented enactment of the D.C. House seat legislation—what liberal legal scholar Jonathan Turley referred to as the most "premeditated" unconstitutional act in decades. But with Barack Obama's election and solid Democrat majorities in both Houses, there is no longer a finger in the dike. D.C. Delegate Eleanor Holmes Norton has asserted that Mr. Obama has committed to signing such legislation.

Significantly, the Justice Department carefully and forcefully opined and testified during the last Congress that the D.C. House legislation is patently unconstitutional. Given the current president's apparent commitment to sign the bill, however, it is difficult to envisage the new political appointees of the Obama Justice Department raising any constitutional objections to this grotesque power play. Interestingly, however, former Clinton-era Solicitor General Walter Dellinger recently observed that the persons named by the president-elect to advise him on such constitutional issues at the Justice Department "bring a stature to the job that will allow them to say no to the president when no is the correct answer." "No" obviously remains the correct answer to the question of whether the president should sign D.C. House seat legislation that repudiates the Constitution's text, more than 200 years of unwavering historical practice and repeated pronouncements of the federal judiciary. But only the delusional would expect that the new president's men and women at Justice would stand with the Constitution against the menacing force of raw political power.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF D.C. VOTING RIGHTS ACT OF 2007

S. 1257, a bill to grant the District of Columbia representation in the House of Representatives as well as to provide an additional House seat for Utah, violates the Constitution's provisions governing the composition and election of the United States Congress.

TESTIMONY BEFORE THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON THE CONSTITUTION, CIVIL RIGHTS, AND PROPERTY RIGHTS, SENATE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Thank you for the opportunity to discuss the Department's views on S. 1257, a bill to grant the District of Columbia representation in the House of Representatives as well as to provide an additional House seat for Utah. For the same reasons stated in the Statement of Administration Policy on the House version of this legislation, the Administration concludes that S. 1257 violates the Constitution's provisions governing the composition and election of the United States Congress. Accordingly, if S. 1257 were presented to the President, his senior advisors would recommend that he veto the bill. I will confine my testimony to the constitutional issues posed by the legislation.

The Department's constitutional position on the legislation is straightforward and is dictated by the unambiguous text of the Constitution as understood and applied for over 200 years. Article I, section 2 of the Constitution provides:

"The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second Year by the People of the several States, and the Electors in each State shall have the Qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature."

This language, together with the language of eleven other explicit constitutional provisions, including the Twenty-Third Amendment ratified in 1961,¹ "makes clear just how deeply Congressional representation is tied to the structure of statehood."² The District of Columbia is not a State. In the absence of a constitutional amendment, therefore, the explicit provisions of the Constitution do not permit Congress to grant congressional representation to the District through legislation.

Shortly after the Constitution was ratified, the District of Columbia was established as the Seat of Government of the United States in accordance with Article I, § 8, cl. 17 of the Constitution. The Framers deliberately placed the capital in a federal enclave that was not itself a State to ensure that the federal Government had the ability to protect itself from potentially hostile state forces. The Framers also gave Congress "exclusive" authority to enact legislation for the internal governance of the enclave to be chosen as the Seat of Government—the same authority Congress wields over the many other federal enclaves ceded by the States.

Beginning even before the District of Columbia was established as the Seat of Government, and continuing to today, there have been determined efforts to obtain congressional representation for the District. Apart from the various unsuccessful attempts to secure such representation through litigation, such efforts have consistently recognized that, because the District is not a State, a constitutional amendment is necessary for it to obtain congressional representation. S. 1257 represents a departure from that settled constitutional and historical understanding, which has long been recognized and accepted by even ardent proponents of District representation.

One of the earliest attempts to secure congressional representation for the Seat of Government was made by no less a constitutional authority than Alexander Hamilton at the pivotal New York ratifying convention. Recognizing that the proposed Constitution did not provide congressional representation for those who would reside in the Seat of Government, Hamilton offered an amendment to the Enclave Clause that would have provided:

"That When the Number of Persons in the District of Territory to be laid out for the Seat of the Government of the United States, shall according to the Rule for the Apportionment of Representatives and Direct Taxes Amount to [left blank] such District shall cease to be parcel of the State granting the Same, and Provision shall be made by Congress for their having a District Representation in that Body."³

Hamilton's proposed amendment was rejected. Other historical materials further confirm the contemporary understanding that the Constitution did not contemplate congressional representation for the District and that a constitutional amendment would be necessary to make such provision.⁴ These historical facts refute the contention by proponents of S. 1257 that the Framers simply did not consider the lack of congressional representation and, if they had considered it, that they would have provided such representation. In fact, Framers and ratifiers did consider the question and rejected a proposal for such representation.

In more recent years, major efforts to provide congressional representation for the District were pursued in Congress in the 1960s and 1970s, but on each occasion Congress expressly recognized that obtaining such representation would require either Statehood or a constitutional amendment. For example, when the House Judiciary Committee favorably recommended a constitutional amendment for District representation in 1967, it stated as follows:

"If the citizens of the District are to have voting representation in the Congress, a constitutional amendment is essential; statutory action alone will not suffice. This is the case because provisions for elections of Senators and Representatives in the Constitution are stated in terms of the States, and the District of Columbia is not a State."⁵

Congress again considered the District representation issue in 1975, and the House Judiciary Committee again expressly acknowledged that, "[i]f the citizens of the District are to have voting representation in Congress, a constitutional amendment is essential; statutory action will not suffice."⁶

Of course, the courts have not directly reviewed the constitutionality of a statute purporting to grant the District representation because, for the reasons so forcefully reiterated by the House Judiciary Committee, Congress has not previously considered such legislation constitutionally permissible. But numerous federal courts have emphatically concluded that the existing Constitution does not permit the provision of congressional representation for the District. In Adams v. Clinton, a three-judge court stated, in a decision affirmed by the Supreme Court, that "the Constitution does not contemplate that the District may serve as a state for purposes of the apportionment of congressional representation" and stressed that Article I "makes clear just how deeply Congressional representation is tied to the structure of statehood." 90 F. Supp. 2d 35, 46–

47 (D.D.C.), aff'd, 531 U.S. 941 (2000); see generally S. Ry. Co. v. Seaboard Allied Milling Corp., 442 U.S. 444, 462 (1979) (stating that summary affirmance is a precedential ruling on the merits). In Banner v. United States, 428 F.3d 303 (D.C. Cir. 2005) (per curiam), a panel of the D.C. Circuit that included Chief Justice John Roberts flatly concluded: "[t]he Constitution denies District residents voting representation in Congress. . . . Congress is the District's Government, see U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 17, and the fact that District residents do not have congressional representation does not alter that constitutional reality." Id. at 309.7 The court added: "[i]t is beyond question that the Constitution grants Congress exclusive authority to govern the District, but does not provide for District representation in Congress." Id. at 312. And in explaining why the Constitution does not permit the District's delegate in Congress to have the voting power of a Representative in Michel v. Anderson, 817 F. Supp. 126 (D.D.C. 1993), the court stressed that the legislative power "is constitutionally limited to 'Members chosen . . . by the People of the several States.' U.S. Const. Art. I, § [2], cl. 1." Id. at 140.

The numerous explicit provisions of the constitutional text; the consistent construction of those provisions throughout the course of American history by courts, Congress, and the Executive;⁸ and the historical evidence of the Framers' and ratifiers' intent in adopting the Constitution conclusively demonstrate that the Constitution does not permit the granting of congressional representation to the District by simple legislation.

We are aware of, and not persuaded by, the recent and novel claim that this legislation should be viewed as a constitutional exercise of Congress's authority under the Enclave Clause, U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 17, to "exercise exclusive legislation" over the Seat of Government and other federal enclaves. That theory is insupportable. First, it is incompatible with the plain language of the many provisions of the Constitution that, unlike the Enclave Clause, are directly and specifically concerned with the composition, election, and very nature of the House of Representatives and the Congress. Those provisions were the very linchpin of the Constitution, because it was only by reconciling the conflicting wishes of the large and small States as to representation in Congress that the Great Compromise that enabled the Constitution's ratification was made possible. Consequently, every word of Article I's provisions concerning the composition and election of the House and the Senate—and particularly the words repeatedly linking congressional representation to "each State" or "the People of the several States"—was carefully chosen. In contrast, the Enclave Clause has nothing to do with the composition, qualifications, or election of Members of Congress. Its provision for "exclusive legislation" concerns legislation respecting the internal operation of "such District" and other enclaves. The Enclave Clause gives Congress extensive legislative authority "over such District," but that authority plainly does not extend to legislation affecting the entire Nation. S. 1257 would alter the very nature of the House of Representatives. By no reasonable construction can the narrowly focused provisions of the Enclave Clause be construed to give Congress such sweeping authority.

Second, whatever power Congress has under the Enclave Clause is limited by the other provisions of the Constitution. As stated by the Supreme Court in Binns v. United States, 194

U.S. 486 (1904), the Enclave Clause gives Congress plenary power over the District "save as controlled by the provisions of the Constitution." Id. at 491. As the Supreme Court has further explained, the Clause gives Congress legislative authority over the District and other enclaves "in all cases where legislation is possible."⁹ The composition, election, and qualifications of Members of the House are expressly and specifically governed by other provisions of the Constitution that tie congressional representation to Statehood. The Enclave Clause gives Congress no authority to deviate from those core constitutional provisions.

Third, the notion that the Enclave Clause authorized legislation establishing congressional representation for the Seat of Government is contrary to the contemporary understanding of the Framers and the consistent historical practice of Congress. As I mentioned earlier, the amendment unsuccessfully offered by Alexander Hamilton at the New York ratifying convention to authorize such representation when the Seat of Government's population reached a certain level persuasively demonstrates that the Framers did not read the Enclave Clause to authorize or contemplate such representation. Other contemporaneous historical evidence reinforces that understanding. See supra n. 4. Moreover, Congress's consistent recognition in practice that constitutional amendments were necessary not only to provide congressional representation for the District, but also to grant it electoral votes for President and Vice President under the 23rd Amendment, belies the notion that the Enclave Clause has all along authorized the achievement of such measures through simple legislation. Given the enthusiastic support for such measures by their congressional proponents, it is simply implausible that Congress would not previously have discovered and utilized that authority as a means of avoiding the enormous difficulties of constitutional amendment.

Fourth, the proponents' interpretation of the Enclave Clause proves far too much; the consequences that would necessarily flow from acceptance of that theory demonstrate its implausibility. As the Supreme Court has recognized, "[t]he power of Congress over the federal enclaves that come within the scope of Art. I, § 8, cl. 17, is obviously the same as the power of Congress over the District of Columbia."¹⁰ It follows that if Congress has constitutional authority to provide congressional representation for the District under the Enclave Clause, it has the same authority for the other numerous federal enclaves (such as various military bases and assorted federal lands ceded by the States). But that is not all. The Supreme Court has also recognized that Congress's authority to legislate respecting the U.S. territories under the Territories Clause, U.S. Const. art. IV, § 3, cl. 2, is equivalent to its "exclusive legislation" authority under the Enclave Clause. See, e.g., Binns, 194 U.S. at 488. If the general language of the Enclave Clause provides authority to depart from the congressional representational provisions of Article I, it is not apparent why similar authority does not reside in the Territories Clause, which would enable Congress to enact legislation authorizing congressional representation for Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and other territories. These unavoidable corollaries of the theory underlying S. 1257 demonstrate its invalidity. Given the great care with which the Framers provided for State-based congressional representation in the Composition Clause and related provisions, it is implausible to suggest that they would have simultaneously provided for the subversion of those very provisions by giving Congress carte blanche to create an indefinite number of additional seats under the Enclave Clause.

Finally, we note that the bill's proponents conspicuously fail to address another logical consequence that flows from the Enclave Clause theory: If Congress may grant the District representation in the House by virtue of its purportedly expansive authority to legislate to further the District's general welfare, it follows logically that it could use the same authority to grant the District (and other enclaves and territories) two Senators as well.

At bottom, the theory that underlies S. 1257 rests on the premise that the Framers drafted a Constitution that left the door open for the creation of an indefinite number of congressional seats that would have fatally undermined the carefully crafted representation provisions that were the linchpin of the Constitution. Such a premise is contradicted by the historical and constitutional record.

The clear and carefully phrased provisions for State-based congressional representation constitute the very bedrock of our Constitution. Those provisions have stood the test of time in providing a strong and stable basis for the preservation of constitutional democracy and the rule of law. If enacted, S. 1257 would undermine the integrity of those critical provisions and open the door to further deviations from the successful framework that is our constitutional heritage. If the District is to be accorded congressional representation without Statehood, it must be accomplished through a process that is consistent with our constitutional scheme, such as amendment as provided by Article V of the Constitution.

Deputy Assistant Attorney General.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET, WASHINGTON, DC,
SEPTEMBER 18, 2007.

STATEMENT OF ADMINISTRATION POLICY
S. 1257—DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA HOUSE VOTING RIGHTS ACT OF 2007

The Administration strongly opposes passage of S. 1257. The bill violates the Constitution's provisions governing the composition and election of the United States Congress. Accordingly, if S. 1257 were presented to the President, his senior advisors would recommend that he veto the bill.

The Constitution limits representation in the House to Representatives of States. Article I, Section 2 provides: "The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second Year by the People of the several States, and the Electors in each State shall have the Qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous Branch of the State legislature." The Constitution also contains 11 other provisions expressly linking congressional representation to Statehood.

The District of Columbia is not a State. Accordingly, congressional representation for the District of Columbia would require a constitutional amendment. Advocates of congressional representation for the District have long acknowledged this. As the House Judiciary Committee stated in recommending passage of such a constitutional amendment in 1975:

"If the citizens of the District are to have voting representation in the Congress, a constitutional amendment is essential; statutory action alone will not suffice. This is the case because provisions for elections of Senators and Representatives in the Constitution are stated in terms of the States, and the District of Columbia is not a State."

Courts have reached the same conclusion. In 2000, for example, a three-judge panel concluded "that the Constitution does not contemplate that the District may serve as a state for purposes of the apportionment of congressional representatives." Adams v. Clinton, 90 F. Supp. 2d 35, 46-47 (D.D.C. 2000). The Supreme Court affirmed that decision. Furthermore, Congress's own Research Service found that, without a constitutional amendment, it is "likely that the Congress does not have authority to grant voting representation in the House of Representatives to the District of Columbia."

Claims that S. 1257 should be viewed as an exercise of Congress's "exclusive" legislative authority over the District of Columbia as the seat of the Federal government are not persuasive. Congress's exercise of legislative authority over the District of Columbia is qualified by other provisions of the Constitution, including the Article I requirement that representation in the House of Representatives is limited to the "several States." Congress cannot vary that constitutional requirement under the guise of the "exclusive legislation" clause, a clause that provides the same legislative authority over Federal enclaves like military bases as it does over the District.

For all the foregoing reasons, enacting S. 1257's extension of congressional representation to the District would be unconstitutional. It would also call into question (by subjecting to constitutional challenge in the courts) the validity of all legislation passed by the reconstituted House of Representatives.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the testimony by Professor Jonathan Turley before the House Judiciary Committee September 14, 2006, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA VOTING RIGHTS
STATEMENT OF JONATHAN TURLEY, COMMITTEE ON HOUSE JUDICIARY, SUBCOMMITTEE ON CON-STITUTION

It is an honor to be asked to testify on the important question of the representational status of the District of Columbia in Congress. Due to the short period for the preparation of written testimony and a family emergency, the committee staff has permitted me to submit this summary of the testimony that I will offer on September 14, 2006. A full written statement is being completed and will be available at the hearing.

General Comments

There should be general agreement that the current non-voting status of the District is fundamentally at odds with the principles and traditions of our constitutional system. As Justice Black stated in Wesberry v. Sanders: "No right is more precious in a free country than that of having a voice in the election of those who make the laws under which, as good citizens, we must live. Other rights, even the most basic, are illusory if the right to vote is undermined."

Yet, unlike many issues before Congress, there has always been a disagreement about the means rather than the ends of full representation for the District residents. Regrettably, I believe that H.R. 5388 is the wrong means. Despite the best of motivations, the bill is fundamentally flawed on a constitutional level and would only serve to needlessly delay true reform for District residents. Indeed, there would be an inevitable and likely successful legal challenge to a bill. Even if successful, this bill would ultimately achieve only partial representational status. Frankly, giving the District only a vote in the House is the equivalent of allowing Rosa Parks to move halfway to the front of the bus in the name of progress. District residents deserve full representation and, while this bill would not offer such reform, there are alternatives, including a three-phased proposal that I have advocated in the past.

The Original Purpose and Diminishing Necessity of the Federal Enclave

The creation of the federal enclave was the direct result of the failure of state officials to protect Congress during a period of unrest. On January 1, 1783, Congress was meeting in Philadelphia when they were surprised by a mob of Revolutionary War veterans demanding their long-overdue back pay. It was a period of great discontentment with Congress and the public of Pennsylvania was more likely to help the mob than to help suppress it. Indeed, when Congress called on state officials to call out the militia, they refused. Congress was forced to flee, first to Princeton, N.J., then to Annapolis and ultimately to New York City.

When the framers gathered again in Philadelphia in the summer of 1787 to draft a new constitution, the flight from that city five years before was still prominent in their minds. Madison and others called for the creation of a federal enclave or district as the seat of the federal government—independent of any state and protected by federal authority. Only then, Madison noted could they avoid "public authority [being] insulted and its proceedings . . . interrupted, with impunity."

In addition to the desire to be free of the transient support of an individual state, the framers advanced a number of other reasons for creating this special enclave. There was a fear that a state (and its representatives in Congress) would have too much influence over Congress, by creating "a dependence of the members of the general government." There was also a fear that the symbolic honor given to one state would create in "the national councils an imputation of awe and influence, equally dishonorable to the Government and dissatisfactory to the other members of the confederacy." There was also a view that the host state would benefit too much from "[t]he gradual accumulation of public improvements at the stationary residence of the Government."

The District, therefore, was created for the specific purpose of being a non-State without direct representatives in Congress. The security and operations of the federal enclave would remain the collective responsibilities of the entire Congress—of all of the various states. While I believe that this purpose is abundantly clear, I do not believe that most of these concerns have continued relevance for legislators. Since the Constitutional Convention, courts have recognized that federal, not state, jurisdiction governs federal lands. Moreover, the federal government now has a large security force and is not dependent on the states for security. Finally, the position of the federal government vis-a-vis the states has flipped with the federal government now the dominant party in this relationship. The real motivating purposes of the creation of the federal enclave, therefore, no longer exist. What remains is the symbolic question of whether the seat of the federal government should be on neutral ground. It is a question that should not be dismissed as insignificant. To the contrary, I personally believe that the seat of the federal government should remain completely federal territory as an important symbol of the equality of all states in the governance of the nation. The actual seat of government, however, is a tiny fraction of the existing federal district.

The Unconstitutionality of H.R. 5388

I believe that the Dinh/Starr analysis is fundamentally flawed and that H.R. 5388 would violate the clear language and meaning of Article I. To evaluate the constitutionality of the legislation, it is useful to follow a classic constitutional interpretation that begins with the text, explores the original meaning of the language, and then considers the implications of the rivaling interpretations for the constitutional system. I believe that this analysis clearly shows that the creation of a vote in the House of Representatives for the District would do great violence to our constitutional traditions and process. To succeed, it would require the abandonment of traditional interpretative doctrines and would allow for future manipulation of one of the most essential and stabilizing components of the Madisonian democracy: the voting rules for the legislative branch.

1. Textual Analysis

Any constitutional analysis necessarily begins with the text of the relevant provision or provisions. In this case, there are two central provisions. The most important textual statement relevant to this debate is found in Article I, Section 2 that states unambiguously that the House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen "by the people of the several states." As with the Seventeenth Amendment election of the composition of the Senate, the text clearly limits the House to the membership of representatives of the several states. The second provision is the District Clause found in Article I, Section 8 which gives Congress the power to "exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever, over such District."

On its face, the reference to "the people of the several states" is a clear restriction of the voting membership to actual states. This is evidenced in a long line of cases that exclude District residents from benefits or rights given to citizens of states under the Constitution.

It has been argued by both Dinh and Starr that the textual clarity in referring to states is immaterial because other provisions with such references have been interpreted as nevertheless encompassing District residents. This argument is illusory in my view. The major cases extending the meaning of states to the District involve an irreconcilable conflict between a literal interpretation of the term "state" and the expressed inherent rights of all American citizens under the equal protection clause and other provisions. District citizens remain U.S. citizens, even though they are not state citizens. The creation of the federal district removed one right of citizens—voting in Congress—in exchange for the status conferred by resident in the Capitol City. It was never intended to turn residents into noncitizens with no constitutional rights.

The upshot of these opinions is that a literal interpretation of the word "states" would produce facially illogical and unintended consequences. Since residents remain U.S. citizens, they must continue to enjoy those protections accorded to citizens. Otherwise, they could all be enslaved or impaled at the whim of Congress.

2. Original and Historical Meaning

Despite some suggestions to the contrary, the absence of a vote in Congress was clearly understood as a defining element of a federal district. During ratification, various leaders objected to the disenfranchisement of the citizens in the district and even suggested amendments that would have addressed the problem. One such amendment was offered by Alexander Hamilton, who wanted the District residents to be able to secure representation in Congress once they grew to a reasonable size. Neither this nor other such amendments offered in states like North Carolina and Pennsylvania were adopted.

Whatever ambiguity existed over continuing authority of Maryland or Virginia, the disenfranchisement of citizens from votes in Congress was clearly understood. Indeed, not long after the cessation, a retrocession movement began. Members questioned the need to "keep the people in this degraded situation" and objected to the subjection of American citizens to "laws not made with their own consent." At the time of the ratification, leaders knew and openly discussed the non-voting status of the District in the clearest and strongest possible language.

This debate in 1804 leaves no question as to the early understanding of the status of the District as a non-state without representational status. Much of this debate followed the same lines of argument that we hear today. While acknowledging that "citizens may not possess full political rights," leaders like John Bacon of Massachusetts noted that they had special status and influence as residents of the Capitol City. Yet, retrocession bills were introduced within a few years of the actual cessation—again prominently citing the lack of any congressional representation as a motivating factor. Indeed, the retrocession of Virginia highlights the original understanding of the status of the District. Virginians contrasted their situation with those residents of Washington. Washingtonians, however, were viewed as compensated for their loss of political representation. As a committee noted in 1835, "[o]ur situation is essentially different, and far worse, than that of our neighbors on the northern side of the Potomac. They are citizens of the Metropolis, of a great, and noble Republic, and wherever they go, there clusters about them all those glorious associations, connected with the progress and fame of their country. They are in some measure compensated in the loss of their political rights."

Much is made of the ten-year period during which District residents voted with their original states—before the federal government formally took over control of the District. This, however, was simply a transition period before the District became the federal enclave.

3. Policy Implications

There are considerable risks and problems with this approach to securing a vote in Congress for the District. First, by adopting a liberal interpretation of the meaning of states in Article I, the Congress would be undermining the very bedrock of our constitutional system. The membership and division of Congress was carefully defined by the Framers. The legislative branch is the engine of the Madisonian democracy. It is in these two houses that disparate factional disputes are converted into majoritarian compromises—the defining principle of the Madisonian system. By allowing majorities to manipulate the membership rolls would add a dangerous instability and uncertainty to the system.

Second, if successful, this legislation would allow any majority in Congress to manipulate the voting membership of the House. This is not the only federal enclave and there is great potential for abuse and mischief in the exercise of such authority. Third, while the issue of Senate representation is left largely untouched in the Dinh/Starr analysis, there is no obvious principle that would prevent a majority from expanding its ranks with two new Senate seats for the District. Two Senators and a member of the House would be a considerable level of representation for a non-state with a small population. Yet, this analysis would suggest that such a change could take place without a constitutional amendment.

Finally, H.R. 5388 would only serve to delay true representational status for district residents. On a practical level, this bill would likely extinguish efforts at full representation in both houses. During the pendency of the litigation, it is highly unlikely that additional measures would be considered—delaying reforms by many years. Ultimately, if the legislation is struck down, it would leave the campaign for full representation in shambles.

The Problematic Basis for Awarding an At-Large Seat to Utah

The proposal of awarding an at-large seat to Utah is an admittedly novel question that would raise issues of first impression for the courts. However, I am highly skeptical of the legality of this approach, particularly under the "one-man, one-vote" doctrine established in Wesberry v. Sanders, 376 U.S. 1 (1964). This is a question that leads to some fairly metaphysical notions of overlapping representation and citizens with 1.4 representational status. On one level, the addition of an at-large seat would seem to benefit all Utah citizens equally since they would vote for two members. Given the deference to Congress under the "necessary and proper" clause, an obvious argument could be made that it does not contravene the "one man, one vote" standard.

However, there are various reasons why a federal court would be on good ground to strike down this portion of H.R. 5388. First, while the Supreme Court has not clearly addressed the interstate implications of "one man, one vote," this bill would likely force it to do so. Awarding two representatives to each resident of Utah creates an obvious imbalance vis-à-vis other states. House members are expected to be advocates for this insular constituency. Here, residents of one state could look to two representatives to do their bidding while other citizens would be limited to one. Given racial and cultural demographic differences between Utah and other states, this could be challenged as diluting the power of minority groups in Congress.

Second, while interstate groups challenge the increased representation for Utah citizens, the at-large seat could also be challenged by some intrastate groups as diluting their specific voting power. If Utah simply added an additional congressional district, the ratio of citizens to members would be reduced. The additional member would represent a defined group of people who have unique geographical and potentially racial or political characteristics. However, by making the seat at large, these citizens would now have to share two members with a much larger and more diffuse group—particularly in the constituency of the at-large member. It is likely that the member who is elected at large would be different from one who would have to run in a particular district such as a more liberal or diverse section of the Salt Lake City population.

Third, this approach would be used by a future majority of Congress to manipulate voting in Congress and to reduce representation for insular groups. Rather than creating a new district that may lean toward one party or have increased representation of one racial or religious group, Congress could use at-large seats under the theory of this legislation. Moreover, Congress could create new forms of represented districts for overseas Americans or for federal enclaves. The result would be to place Congress on a slippery slope where transient majorities tweak representational divisions for their own advantage.

Finally, while it would be difficult to predict how this plan would fare under a legal challenge, it is certain to be challenged. This creates the likelihood of Congress having at least one member (or two members if you count the District representative) who would continue to vote under a considerable cloud of questioned legitimacy. In close votes, this could produce great uncertainty as to the finality or legitimacy of federal legislation. This is entirely unnecessary. If a new representative is required, it is better to establish a fourth district not just a fourth at-large representative for legal and policy reasons.

A Modified Retrocession Proposal

One hundred and sixty years ago, Congress retroceded land back to Virginia under its Article I authority. Retrocession has always been the most direct way of securing a resumption of voting rights for District residents. Most of the District can be simply returned from whence it came: state of Maryland. The greatest barrier to retrocession has always been more symbolic rather than legal. Replacing Washington, DC with Washington, MD is a conceptual leap that many are simply not willing to make. However, it is the most logical resolution of this problem.

For a number of years, I have advocated the reduction of the District of Columbia to the small area that runs from the Capitol to the Lincoln Memorial. The only residents in this space would be the First Family. The remainder of the current District would then be retroceded to Maryland. However, I have also proposed a three-phase process for retrocession. In the first phase, a political transfer would occur immediately with the District securing a house seat as a Maryland district and residents voting in Maryland statewide elections. In the second phase, incorporation of public services from education to prisons to law enforcement would occur. In the third phase, any tax and revenue incorporation would occur.

These phases would occur over many years with only the first phase occurring immediately upon retrocession. Indeed, I recommend the creation of a three-commissioner body like the one that worked with George Washington in the establishment of the original federal district. These commissioners would recommend and oversee the incorporation process. Moreover, Maryland can agree to continue to treat the District as a special tax or governing zone until incorporation is completed. Indeed, Maryland may choose to allow the District to continue in a special status due to this unique position. The fact is that any incorporation is made easier, not more difficult, by the District's historic independence. Like most cities, it would continue to have its own law enforcement and local governing authority. However, it would also benefit from incorporation into Maryland educational system and other statewide programs related to prisons and other public needs.

In my view, this approach would be unsailable on a legal level and highly efficient on a practical level. I realize that there remains a fixation with the special status of the city, but much of this status would remain. While the city would not technically be the seat of government, it would obviously remain for all practical purposes our Capitol City.

Regardless of what proposal is adopted, I strongly encourage you not to move forward with H.R. 5388. It is an approach that achieves less representation than is deserved for the District by means that asserts more power than is held by the Congress. It is certainly time to right this historical wrong, but, in our constitutional system, it is often more important how we do something than what we do. This is the wrong means to a worthy end. However, it is not the only means and I encourage the members to direct these considerable energies toward a more lasting and complete resolution of the status of the District of Columbia in Congress.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I commend to my fellow Senators the April 3, 1987 U.S. Justice Department Office of Legal Policy Report to the Attorney General entitled "The Question of Statehood for the District of Columbia." I ask unanimous consent that the Executive Summary and section titled "Proposals for Giving Representation in Congress to the District of Columbia, Voting Member in the House of Representatives" be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Efforts to admit the District of Columbia to the Union as a state should be vigorously opposed. Granting the national capital statehood through statutory means raises numerous troubling constitutional questions. After careful consideration of these issues, we have concluded that an amendment to the Constitution would be required before the District of Columbia may be admitted to the Union as a state. Statehood for the Nation's capital is inconsistent with the language of the Constitution, as well as the intent of its Framers, and would work a basic change in the federal system as it has existed for the past two hundred years. Under our Constitution, power was divided between the states and the federal government in the hope, as Madison wrote, that "[t]he different governments will control each other," thus securing self-government, individual liberty, and the rights of minorities. In order to serve its function in the federal structure a state must be independent of the federal government. However, the District of Columbia is not independent; it is a political and economic dependency of the national government.

At the same time, it is essential that the federal government maintain its independence of the states. If the District of Columbia were now admitted to statehood, it would not be one state among many. Because it is the national capital, the District would be primus inter pares, first among equals. The "State of Columbia . . . could come perilously close to being the state whose sole business is to govern, to control all the other states. It would be the imperial state; it would be 'Rome on the Potomac.'" It was this very dilemma that prompted the Founders to establish the federal capital in a district located outside of the borders of any one of the states, under the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress. Their reasons for creating the District are still valid and militate against granting it statehood.

Many have recognized the fundamental flaws in plans to grant the District of Columbia statehood. For instance, while testifying in support of the proposed 1978 District amendment, which would have treated the District of Columbia "as if it were a State" for purposes of national elections, Senator Edward Kennedy dismissed what he called "the statehood fallacy," and stated that, "[t]he District is neither a city nor a State. In fact, statehood may well be an impossible alternative, given the practical and constitutional questions involved in changing the historical status of the Nation's Capital." A pamphlet entitled "Democracy Denied" circulated in support of the 1978 amendment, and fully endorsed by District Delegate Walter E. Fauntroy, plainly acknowledged that granting statehood to the District of Columbia "would defeat the purpose of having a federal city, i.e., the creation of a district over which the Congress would have exclusive control." That pamphlet also recognized that statehood "presents a troublesome problem with the 23rd Amendment if the federal district were to be wiped out by legislation." Indeed, Delegate Fauntroy has opposed statehood for the District in the past, correctly pointing out that "this would be in direct defiance of the prescriptions of the Founding Fathers." As former Senator Mathias of Maryland stated, "[i]t is not a State . . . it should not be a State."

These points are well taken. The factors that mitigated against statehood for the District of Columbia in 1978 have not changed. The rejection of the District voting rights constitutional amendment by the states does not make statehood any more desirable, or any less constitutionally suspect, today than it was a decade ago. Granting statehood to the District of Columbia would defeat the purpose of having a federal city, would be in direct defiance of the intent of the Founders, and would require an amendment to the Constitution.

I. NEED FOR AN AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION BEFORE THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA MAY BE ADMITTED TO THE UNION AS A STATE

Even if statehood for the District of Columbia represented sound policy, we do not believe that it can be accomplished merely by a statute admitting the District to the Union. The Constitution contemplates a federal district as the seat of the general government, and would have to be amended. The Department of Justice has long taken this position. In 1978, Assistant Attorney General John M. Hannon concluded on behalf of the Carter Administration that, "it was the intent of the Framers that the actual seat of the Federal Government, as opposed to its other installations, be outside any State and independent of the cooperation and consent of the State authorities If these reasons have lost validity, the appropriate response would be to provide statehood for the District by constitutional amendment rather than to ignore the Framers' intentions."

The retention of federal authority over a truncated, federal service area would not answer this constitutional objection. The language of the Constitution grants Congress exclusive authority over the district that became the seat of government, not merely over the seat of the government. The district that became the seat of government is the District of Columbia. It does not appear that Congress may, consistent with the language of the Constitution, abandon its exclusive authority over any part of the District.

Further, the Twenty-third Amendment requires that "[t]he District constituting the seat of Government of the United States" appoint electors to participate in the Electoral College. The amendment was proposed, drafted and ratified with reference to the District of Columbia. When the states adopted this amendment, they confirmed the understanding that the District is a unique juridical entity with permanent status under the Constitution. Another amendment would be necessary to remake this entity.

Finally, we believe that Congress' ability to admit the District of Columbia into the Union as a new state would depend upon the consent of the legislature of the original ceding state. Article IV, section 3 of the Constitution provides that: "no new State shall be formed or erected within the Jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the Junction of two or more States, or parts of States, without the Consent of the legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress." Accordingly, the consent of Maryland would be necessary before the District of Columbia could be admitted to the Union. Should Maryland refuse to consent, the area that is now the District of Columbia could not be made a state without amendment of Article IV, section 3.

Thus, before the District of Columbia may be admitted to the Union as a state, the Constitution would have to be amended. Such an amendment, however, would be unwise.

II. THE SOUND HISTORICAL REASONS FOR A FEDERAL DISTRICT STILL OPERATE TODAY

In the Founders' view, a federal enclave where Congress could exercise complete authority, insulating itself from insult and securing its deliberations from interruption, was an "indispensable necessity." They settled upon the device of a federal district as the means by which the federal government might remain independent of the influence of any single state, to avoid, in the words of Virginia's George Mason, "a provincial tincture to ye Natl. deliberations."

The passing years have, if anything, increased the need for ultimate congressional control of the federal city. The District is an integral part of the operations of the nation's government, which depends upon a much more complex array of services, utilities, transportation facilities, and communication networks than it did at the Founding. If the District were to become a state, its financial problems, labor troubles, and other concerns would still affect the federal government's operations. Congress, however, would be deprived of a direct, controlling voice in the resolution of such problems. In a very real sense, the federal government would be dependent upon the State of Columbia for its day to day existence.

The retention of congressional authority over a much reduced federal enclave would not solve this problem. The Founder's contemplated more than a cluster of buildings, however grand, and their surrounding parks and gardens as the national capital. The creation of a new "federal town" was intended, in large part so that Congress could independently control the basic services necessary to the operation of the federal government. As former Senator Birch Bayh pointed out in 1978, "when our Founding Fathers established this as a capital city . . . they did not just establish a place that should be the Federal city and say this is where the Federal buildings are. But they envisioned this as a viable city, a capital city with people who work, have businesses, and have transportation lines, and homes. The essential establishment of the Nation's Capital was not an establishment of the Nation's Federal buildings but the Nation's city."

Further, there remain virtually insurmountable practical problems with District statehood. The operations of the federal government sprawl over the District. As a result, the new "state" would be honeycombed with federal installations, its territory fragmented by competing jurisdictions. As Assistant Attorney General Patricia Wald asked while testifying on behalf of the Carter Administration, regarding the proposed 1978 District amendment, "[w]ould the remaining non-Federal area constitute in any real sense a geographically homogeneous entity that justifies statehood?" It was for these very reasons that former Mayor Washington expressed doubts about statehood for the District. In 1975 he commented that the city of Washington is "so physically, and economically and socially bound together that I would have problems with statehood in terms of exacting from it some enclaves, or little enclaves all around the city. Ultimately, it seems to me, that would erode the very fabric of the city itself, and the viability of the city."

Finally, in a very real sense the District belongs not only to those who reside within its borders, but to the Nation as a whole. In opposing statehood for the District in 1978, Senator Bayh, an otherwise ardent proponent of direct District participation in congressional elections, eloquently summed up the objection: "I guess as a Senator from Indiana I hate to see us taking the Nation's Capital from [5,000,000] Hoosiers. It is part ours. I do not see why the District should be a State because it is, indeed, the Nation's Capital."

III. THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA IS NOT INDEPENDENT OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

A. Dependence on the Federal Establishment

The states of the American Union are more than merely geographic entities: Each is what has been termed "a proper Madisonian society"—a society composed of a "diversity of interests and financial independence." It is this diversity which guards the liberty of the individual and the rights of minorities. As Madison wrote, "the security for civil rights . . . consists in the multiplicity of interests . . . The degree of security . . . will depend on the number of interests . . . and this may be presumed to depend on the extent of country and number of people comprehended under the same government."

The District of Columbia lacks this essential political requisite for statehood. It has only one significant "industry," government. As a result, the District has one monolithic interest group, those who work for, provide services to, or otherwise deal with, the federal government. The national government was, historically, the city's only reason for being. Close to two-thirds of the District's workforce is employed either directly or indirectly in the business of the federal government. Indeed, in 1982 the District government maintained that, in the Washington Metropolitan area, for every federal worker laid off as a result of government reductions in force, one person would be thrown out of work in the private sector.

The implications of this monolithic interest are far reaching. For instance, the Supreme Court, in Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. 528 (1985), has recently decided that the delicate balance between federal and state power is to be guarded primarily by the intrinsic role the states play in the structure of the national government and the political process. The congressional delegation from the District of Columbia, however, would have little interest in preserving the balance between federal and state authority entrusted to it by Garcia. The continued centralization of power in the hands of the national government would, in fact, be to the direct benefit of "Columbia" and its residents. Hence; the system of competing sovereignties—designed to preserve our fundamental liberties would be compromised.

B. Economic Dependence

In addition to political independence and diversity, a state must have "sufficient population and resources to support a state government and to provide its share of the cost of the Federal Government." The District of Columbia simply lacks the resources both to support a state government and to provide its fair share of the cost of the federal government. The District is a federal dependency. Annually, in addition to all other federal aid programs, it receives a direct payment from the federal treasury of a half billion dollars; some $522 million was budgeted for the District in Fiscal 1987, $445 million to be paid directly to the District's local government. All in all, District residents outstrip the residents of the states in per capita federal aid by a wide margin. For instance, in 1983 the District received $2,177 per capita in federal aid, some five and one-half times the national average of $384.

Not surprisingly, Washington Mayor Marion Barry has plainly stated that the District would still "require the support of the Federal Government" if statehood were granted. The continuation of federal support is ordinarily justified because of the percentage of federal land in the District of Columbia that cannot be taxed by the local government. However, the federal government owns a greater percentage of the land area of 10 states, each of which bears the full burdens of statehood without the sort of massive federal support annually received by the District of Columbia. If the District aspires to statehood, it must be prepared to stand as an equal with the other states in its fiscal affairs.

CONCLUSION

The District of Columbia should not be granted statehood. In our considered opinion, an amendment to the Constitution would be needed before the District could be admitted as a state, and in any case, the reasons that led the Founder's to establish the national capital in a district outside the borders of any state are still valid. The District's special status is an integral part of our system of federalism, which itself was a compromise between pure democracy and the need to secure individual liberties and minority rights. The residents of the District enjoy all of the rights of other citizens, save the right to vote in congressional elections. They exchanged this right, as Mr. Justice Story wrote, for the benefits of living in the "metropolis of a great and noble republic." Instead, "their rights [are] under the immediate protection of the representatives of the whole Union." This was the price of the national capital, and District residents have enjoyed the fruits of this bargain for almost two centuries.

III. PROPOSALS FOR GIVING REPRESENTATION IN CONGRESS TO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The numerous schemes proposed over the last two hundred years to give the residents of the federal district some sort of direct voting representation in Congress may be distilled into five basic proposals: (1) legislation to allow the District a voting member in the House of Representatives alone; (2) retrocession of the District of Columbia to Maryland, retaining a truncated federal district; (3) allowing District residents to vote as residents of Maryland in national elections; (4) an amendment to the Constitution to give the District full representation in both House and Senate as if it were a state; and (5) full statehood. None of these proposals offers a sound policy solution, and several appear to be fatally flawed when exposed to constitutional scrutiny.

A. Voting Member in the House of Representatives

From time to time it has been suggested that the District be granted, by simple legislation, a voting member in the House of Representatives. This proposal, however, runs into significant constitutional difficulties.

Those sections of the Constitution which define the political structure of the federal government speak uniformly in terms of the states and their citizens. Article I, section 2 provides that, "[t]he House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second Year by the People of the several States No person shall be a Representative . . . who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen." Article I, section 3 provides that, "[t]he Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State No Person shall be a Senator. . . . who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen." With respect to the election of the President, Article II, section 1 provides that, "[e]ach State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress." The Seventeenth Amendment directs that "[t]he Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof." In short, "[d]irect representation in the Congress by a voting member has never been a right of United States citizenship. Instead, the right to be so represented has been a right of the citizens of the States."

The word "state" as used in Article I may not be interpreted to include the District of Columbia, even though as a "distinct political society" it might qualify under a more general definition of that term. Consistent with the intent of the Framers, such arguments were properly dismissed long ago by Chief Justice Marshall in Hepburn v. Ellzey. In that case, plaintiffs, residents of the District, claimed that they were citizens of a state for purposes of diversity jurisdiction in the federal courts. The Court rejected this position. Marshall reasoned that Congress had adopted the definition of "state" as found in the Constitution in the act providing for diversity jurisdiction, and that the capital could not be considered such a "state". Citing Article I, sections 2 and 3, and Article II, section 1, he concluded that "the members of the American confederacy only are the states contemplated." "These clauses show that the word state is used in the constitution as designating a member of the union, and excludes from the term the significance attached to it by writers on the law of nations." Congress, to be sure, has often treated the District of Columbia as a state for purposes of statutory benefit programs. It is customarily included in the major federal grant programs by the well-worn phrase "for purposes of this legislation, the term 'State' shall include the District of Columbia." The courts, also, have occasionally interpreted the word "state" to include the District of Columbia. However, the District has never been automatically included under the term "state" even in federal statutes. In District of Columbia v. Carter, the Supreme Court held that it was not a "State or Territory" under 42 U.S.C. §1983, which creates a federal cause of action for civil rights violations under color of state law. Under the test articulated by Justice Brennan in that case, "[w]hether the District of Columbia constitutes a 'State or Territory' within the meaning of any particular statutory or constitutional provision depends upon the character and aim of the specific provision involved." In any event, allowing the District to participate on an equal footing with the states in federal statutory programs is different in kind from reading the language of the Constitution itself in such a way as to allow alteration of the very composition of the Congress by legislative fiat.

The Constitutional mandate is clear. Only United States citizens who are also citizens of a state are entitled to elect members of Congress. This is hardly a novel proposition. There are many different levels of rights recognized in our system. Aliens, for instance, enjoy certain basic rights, including the benefit of the Equal Protection Clause but are not citizens of the United States and have no vote. The residents of United States possessions overseas also enjoy the protection of the Constitution, but may not vote in federal elections. Many of them are United States citizens—the residents of Puerto Rico and Guam, for instance, fit this category. Like the residents of the District of Columbia, American citizens who are not also citizens of a state do not participate in congressional elections, and they never have enjoyed such participation. The residents of the District of Columbia may not participate directly in congressional elections without becoming citizens of a state, or without an amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, a few weeks ago, I had the honor of raising my right hand and reciting a solemn oath required by the Constitution itself. According to that oath, the first and last duty of a U.S. Senator is to support and defend the U.S. Constitution. By opposing the legislation before us, I believe I am doing both.

The Constitution is short because its authors wanted to be clear, and on the issue of congressional representation they could not have been more so. According to Article I, Section II, only States elect Members of Congress. And, according to the same article, the seat of the Federal Government is not to be considered a State. So the question before us is not whether the Framers meant for the seat of Government to have representation in Congress. They clearly did not. Rather, the question before us is why they didn't want the seat of Government to have representation. And, as a follow-up: What recourse did they leave those who might want to revise what they had written.

In answer to the first question, the Framers opposed statehood for a number of good reasons. First, they didn't want the Federal Government to be beholden to a single State, a situation that would of course unfairly benefit the residents of that State, either materially or through added prestige, at the expense of all the other States. Second, they wanted the Federal Government to have the freedom to relocate if the need arose.

This was not an easy issue for the Framers. But the plain text of the Constitution leaves no doubt as to how they came down on the question: In the end, they decided the interests of the whole were best served by carving out a Federal district that stood apart from the States. This way Federal officials would be able to protect the interests of the whole and give the Federal Government the freedom it would need to operate with complete independence and freedom of movement.

Clearly, not everyone is satisfied with the result. But there should be no doubt about what the words of the Constitution says—not just on the day it was ratified, but throughout our history.

The 23rd amendment, for instance, gave Washington, DC the same number of electoral votes that it would receive as “if it were a state.” What this means, of course, is that at the time this amendment was ratified in 1961, no one was under the illusion that DC was a State—or that it should be treated as one, short of a constitutional amendment.

Clearly, the Framers recognized the deficiencies of the final product. In creating a Federal district, they knew permanent residents of that district would lack representation in Congress. And this is why they left us a remedy within the Constitution itself. If and when the “People of the United States” wished to revise the U.S. Constitution, they could do so by amending it, just as they did in 1961.

The process of amendment is clearly outlined in article V, and it has served the American people well for more than two centuries. Over the years, we have amended our founding document 27 times. From eradicating slavery, to securing the right to vote for women, to putting a limit on the years a President can serve in office, the people of the United States have used the amendment process as the way to secure or expand rights.

So the surest way to honor the aspirations of DC residents is to pursue a remedy which respects the Constitution. One way is through a constitutional amendment that uses the same language as the bill before us. Another would be to allow the residents of the District to vote as if they were residents of a bordering State, or even to declare them residents of a bordering State.

As the Senate's greatest student and fiercest living guardian of the Constitution, the senior Senator from West Virginia, said just last year on the Senate floor:

If we wish to grant representatives of the citizens of the District of Columbia full voting rights, “let us do so, once again, the proper way, by passing a resolution to amend the Constitution consistent with its own terms.”

The bottom line is this: Any proposal to secure the right to vote must honor the Constitution, which Lincoln called the “only safeguard of our liberties.” Anything less would violate the oath we have sworn to uphold, and would guarantee a challenge in the courts that would only further prolong this debate.

The better way is the surer way—and that's the constitutional way.

I will oppose this proposal. I urge my colleagues to do the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, in a few moments the Senator from California, Senator FEINSTEIN, is scheduled to be here to speak on the Ensign amendment and I will yield to her to vote at 3:45. But I say we are coming to a pivotal moment in a march that has gone on for years and years now. In some sense it goes back more than two centuries when—for reasons that are hard for historians let alone Senators to fathom, the District was established as a National Capital, separated from the State to which it had been attached before—an omission was made that was grave and inconsistent with the founding principles of this country. The residents of this National Capital of the greatest democracy of the world were left without a Representative here in Congress who could vote. In a government premised on the consent of the governed, the 600,000 residents of the District today do not have a voting Representative here in Congress.

If you step back, it is actually unbelievable. No one has argued that this is somehow a just result. The fact is that it is patently unjust and un-American, in the sense of a violation of the best principles of this country, of freedom, of democracy, of the Republic based on the votes of the people. So the argument against the proposal that has come out of the committee that I am privileged to chair, that enjoys bipartisan support, is nonetheless that this is not quite the right way to do it.

I understand those who have argued against our proposal have said that the Constitution does not allow us to do it quite this way; that it requires a constitutional amendment. The effect of this I think is to say to the residents of the District: Wait a little while longer. It has only been a couple of hundred years that you have been denied a voting Representative.

That is not fair. In fact, the preponderance of constitutional opinion is that the so-called District clause occupies the field and gives us the opportunity to right this historic wrong. Over and over again, notwithstanding the clause my colleagues rely on which says that the House shall be composed of Members chosen by the people of the several States—they emphasize States—yet in decision after decision the Supreme Court of the United States has said that the District should be considered as a State or else its citizens will be denied equal protection; due process as a State for purposes of the interstate commerce clause; as I stated, for the purposes of diversity of jurisdiction, the opportunity for people to gain access to Federal courts for the right of trial by jury. So the Supreme Court of the United States has made very clear that the District, even when the Constitution refers to States, should be considered as a State. There may be a constitutional argument on the other side; I do not think it is a compelling argument. But if you accept the injustice of the status quo for the residents of the District, an unacceptable injustice that is an embarrassment to this great democracy of ours, then even if you think what S. 160 does is not constitutional, vote to end the injustice because the proposal, S. 160 itself, provides for expedited appeal to the court to determine the constitutionality.

After all, there is always debate. No one knowingly votes for something they think is unconstitutional. Yet there are so many times when we have to acknowledge, as powerful as this great deliberative body is, we are not the ultimate arbiter of constitutionality. That privilege, that power, was given by the Constitution to the judicial branch of our Government.

So I hope, my friends, as we draw close to the hour of decision, that my colleagues, whatever their conclusion about the constitutionality is, will vote to end the injustice imposed on residents of the District. I have always believed America is many things, but in this sense, is a journey. It is a journey historically to realize the extraordinary revolutionary principles adopted in our Declaration of Independence and Constitution that have been followed by so many other countries since the great statement in the Declaration of Independence, those self-evident truths, that all of us are created equal; we are endowed by our creator with these inalienable rights to life and liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

The Constitution enshrines a system of representative government, a great republic, government by the consent of the governed. But we must acknowledge that at the outset of our history, as lofty as the principles were embraced and expressed in the Declaration and the Constitution, they were not fully realized at the outset of our history. People of color, African Americans, were not only denied the rights of citizenship but were only counted three-fifths the equal of Whites. Women did not have the right to vote. Many men did not have the right to vote because the vote in most States was limited to those who owned land.

So over our history, we have been on this extraordinary journey to realize, generation after generation, the ideals stated by our Founders. Of course, in many cases it took too long, but here we are in a country where voting, at least, has been extended fully to most people in our country—the right to vote, the right to have voting representation in Congress. Yet there is this growth remaining; 600,000 of our fellow Americans get taxed, get called to war, get regulated and supervised and everything else, and yet have no say here with a vote by a Representative in the House of Representatives. That is what this bill would do.

It is not a small step, it is a significant, historic step forward on the journey to realize the best principles of this great Republic. When the time comes, I hope and believe our colleagues in both parties will finally right this wrong and extend voting representation in the House to residents of the District.

I am pleased to see the Senator from California on the Senate floor, and I would yield to her at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I thank the manager of the bill. I rise today to speak in strong opposition to amendment No. 575 offered by Senator ENSIGN.

I believe the amendment is reckless. I believe it is irresponsible. I believe it will lead to more weapons and more violence on the streets of our Nation's Capital. It will endanger the citizens of the District, the Government employees who work here, our elected officials, and those who visit this great American Capitol. And, of course, if successful, it will be the first new step in a march to remove all commonsense gun regulations all over this land.

The Ensign amendment repeals gun laws promoting public safety, including DC laws that the U.S. Supreme Court indicated were permissible under the second amendment in the Heller decision. I strongly disagree with the Supreme Court decision in Heller that the second amendment gives individuals a right to possess weapons for private purposes not related to State militias, and that the Constitution does not permit a general ban on handguns in the home. But that is the law. It has been adjudicated. It has gone up to the highest Court, and I am one who believes if we do not like the law, we should try to make changes through the proper legal channels.

However, it is important to note that Heller also stands for the proposition that reasonable, commonsense gun regulations are entirely permissible. As the author of the original assault weapons ban that was enacted in 1994, I know commonsense gun regulations do make our communities safer, while at the same time respecting the rights of sportsmen and others to keep and bear arms.

Justice Scalia wrote in the majority opinion on the Heller case that a wide variety of gun laws are “presumptively lawful,” including the laws “forbidding the carrying of firearms in sensitive places” and regulations governing “the conditions and qualifications of the commercial sale of arms.”

I cannot think of any place more sensitive than the District of Columbia. Even bans on “dangerous and unusual weapons” are completely appropriate under the Heller decision. So it is interesting to me that you have this decision, and then you have the Senate moving even to obliterate what is allowable under the decision.

Senator ENSIGN's amendment completely ignores Heller's language and takes the approach that all guns for all people at all times is called for by Heller. It is not.

We have all seen the tragic consequences of gun violence: the massacre of students at Virginia Tech University in 2007, the murders at Columbine High School in Colorado, the North Hollywood shootout where bank robbers carrying automatic weapons and shooting armor-piercing bullets shot 10 Los Angeles Police Department SWAT officers and seven civilians before being stopped.

We have seen criminal street gangs able to buy weapons at gun shows and out of the back seats or the trunks of automobiles. We have seen their bullets kill hundreds, if not thousands of people across this great land, men, women, and children.

As Senator SCHUMER said, if this amendment becomes law, even if you cannot see, even if you cannot pass a sight test, you can have access to firearms. That is not what this Nation should encourage. Those incidents and the gun violence that occurs every day across this country show us that we should be doing more, not less, to keep guns out of the hands of criminals and the mentally ill and not give them unfettered access to firearms.

It is worth noting just how far this amendment goes in repealing DC law and just how unsafe it will make the streets of this capital. Here is what it would do: It would repeal DC's ban on semiautomatic weapons, including assault weapons.

If this amendment becomes law, military-style assault weapons with high-capacity magazines will be allowed to be stockpiled in homes and businesses in the District, even near Federal buildings such as the White House and the Capitol. Even the .50 caliber sniper rifle, with a range of over 1 mile, will be allowed in DC under this amendment. This is a weapon capable of firing rounds that can penetrate concrete and armor plating. And at least one model of the .50 caliber sniper rifle is easily concealed and transported. One gun manufacturer describes this model as a “lightweight and tactical” weapon and capable of being collapsed and carried in “a very small inconspicuous package.”

Is this what we want to do? There is simply no good reason anyone needs semiautomatic, military-style assault weapons in an urban community. It is unfathomable to me that the same high-powered sniper rifle used by our Armed Forces will be permitted in the Nation's Capitol. Yet this is exactly what the amendment would allow if passed by the Senate.

Next, the amendment would repeal existing Federal antigun trafficking laws. For years, Federal law has banned gun dealers from selling handguns directly to out-of-State buyers who are not licensed firearms dealers.

This has helped substantially in the fight against illegal interstate gun trafficking, and it has prevented criminals from traveling to other States to buy guns.

Senator ENSIGN's amendment repeals this longstanding Federal law and allows DC residents to cross State lines to buy handguns in neighboring States. Illegal gun traffickers will be able to easily obtain large quantities of firearms outside of DC and then distribute those guns to criminals in DC and in surrounding States.

And no one should be so naive as to say that this amendment will not do this. It will. The amendment repeals DC law restricting the ability of dangerous and unqualified people to obtain guns. The amendment also repeals many of the gun regulations that the Supreme Court said were completely appropriate after Heller.

So all of those who will vote for this amendment should not do so thinking they are just complying with the Heller decision. This is part of a march forward by gun lobby interests in this country to begin to remove all commonsense regulations, and no one should think it is anything else.

This would repeal the DC prohibition on persons under the age of 21 from possessing firearms, and it repeals all age limits for the possession of long guns, including assault weapons.

Do we really want that? I think of the story of an 11-year-old who had a reduced barreled shotgun and just recently killed somebody with it. Is this what we want to see all over this country, the ability of virtually anyone to obtain a firearm regardless of their age? I don't think so.

The amendment even repeals the DC law prohibiting gun possession by people who have poor vision. I heard Senator SCHUMER speak about this yesterday afternoon. Unbelievably, under this amendment, the District would be barred from having any vision requirement for gun use, even if someone is blind. Is this the kind of public policy we want to make for our Nation? Is this how co-opted this body is to the National Rifle Association and others? I hope not.

The amendment before the Senate repeals all firearm registration requirements in the District, making it even more difficult for law enforcement to trace guns used in crimes and track down the registered owner. The amendment repeals all existing safe-storage laws and prohibits the District from enacting any additional safe-storage laws.

After the Heller decision, the District passed emergency legislation to allow guns to be unlocked for self-defense, but requiring that they otherwise be kept locked to keep guns out of the hands of children and criminals. We all ought to want that.

The Ensign amendment repeals even this modest limitation and prevents the District of Columbia City Council from enacting any law that discourages, whatever that means, gun ownership or requiring the safe storage of firearms. How can we, in the Capitol of the United States where we have had so many tragic events, possibly do this? This is simply ridiculous and goes well beyond the Supreme Court's ruling in Heller.

Think about what this means. Consider that every major gun manufacturer recommends that guns be kept unloaded, locked, and kept in a safe place. Under this amendment, the District could not enact any legislation requiring that guns be stored in a safe place, even in homes with children. How can anyone believe this broad-brush amendment is the right thing to do? How can any of us believe it provides protection for the people we represent?

Let me make one other point. The American people clearly do not agree with this amendment. Last fall, when a virtually identical bill was being considered in the House of Representatives, a national poll found that 69 percent of Americans opposed Congress passing a law to eliminate the District's gun laws, 69 percent. That is about as good as we get on any controversial issue. Additionally, 60 percent of Americans believe Washington will become less safe if Congress takes this step.

Is this what we want? Do we want the Capitol of the United States to become less safe? I don't think so. Today, if this amendment passes in the Senate, it will be directly against the wishes of the American people. It will not pass because it is good public policy, it will only be passed to placate the National Rifle Association. I say for shame.

As a former mayor who saw firsthand what happens when guns fall into the hands of criminals, juveniles, and the mentally ill, I believe this amendment places the families of the District of Columbia in great jeopardy. The amendment puts innocent lives at stake. It is an affront to the public safety of the District. It is an affront to local home rule. This isn't just a bad amendment; it is a very dangerous one. I very strongly urge Senators to join me in opposing it.

Mr. President, when this bill was tried in the House a year ago, a poll was done nationally in which 69 percent of the people were against it. I have to believe a dominant majority would still be against it. I urge a no vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, I wish to clear up a couple of misstatements made by the other side. First, they said that somebody who is mentally ill could get a gun under this provision. That is not the case. We basically take the Federal definition which does not allow people who are mentally ill to get guns because reasonable background checks can be required and should be required so that somebody who is mentally ill won't get a gun. We don't want to see a Virginia Tech type of a situation happen again. This amendment does not allow it.

The bottom line is, the District of Columbia has the highest murder rate. It has had the highest murder rate, and that rate has gone up as the District has enacted stricter and stricter gun control laws. As the Senator from California said, we want to protect citizens. Shouldn't we do what other places have done and allow law-abiding citizens to actually own guns? That is what the amendment provides. It says: Let's protect the second amendment rights for law-abiding District of Columbia residents so they can protect themselves against intruders coming into their homes.

Criminals are going to get their guns. We know that. Criminals get their guns in DC and around the country. They do it through the black market. In DC, they can go right across the border and get a gun pretty easily. We want to make sure that law-abiding citizens are able to get guns and to protect themselves. That is the basis for this amendment, to say: Let's uphold the Supreme Court. Let's make sure we protect the second amendment rights of citizens in the District of Columbia. We are exercising our constitutional duty both with oversight over the District of Columbia and by protecting the second amendment rights of our citizens.

I urge a ye vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, Senator REID wishes to speak for 2 minutes before the vote. Therefore, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ENSIGN. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ENSIGN. I ask for the yeas and nays on amendment No. 575.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote commence upon completion of my statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, we have had a good debate on this bill. It has gone on all week. I thank my colleagues on both sides of the aisle for a very productive, intelligent conversation. The Senate today is moving to right a century's-old wrong. It is inexcusable and indefensible that nearly 600,000 people who live in the District of Columbia don't enjoy a voice in Congress as do other American citizens. We are the only democracy in the world that denies citizens of its capital—our capital, Washington, DC—the right to vote in a national legislature in any way. Residents of Washington, DC pay taxes. They sit on juries. They serve bravely in the armed services. Yet they are provided only a delegate in Congress who is not permitted to vote. This injustice has stood for far too long. Shadow representation is shadow citizenship and is offensive to our democracy.

I hope the bill will pass today. It is a bill that is fair, bipartisan, and long overdue. If we can send American soldiers to fight for democracy around the world and ensure citizens of other nations that they have a right to vote, the least we can do is give the same opportunity to fellow Americans in the shadow of this great Capitol. We will shortly vote on a bill that honors the residents of the District who responsibly meet every single expectation of American citizenship but are denied one of the most basic civil rights in return.

I commend Chairman LIEBERMAN, who has taken leadership on this issue for no reason or agenda other than he believes it is right to do this.

I urge all Senators to vote for this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 575, offered by the Senator from Nevada, Mr. ENSIGN. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. DURBIN. I announce that the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) is necessarily absent.

The amendment (No. 575) was agreed to.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. LEVIN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, this will be the last vote this week. We hope to be able to get to the omnibus on Monday. We are going to be on the omnibus one way or the other on Monday. I will file cloture on the matter if I have to, but I think we are going to move to that Monday. We have a lot of work to do. The CR expires on Friday. I have had conversations today with the Republican leader. We both understand the urgency of trying to get this done. We are going to try to have as many amendments as time will allow. People should be here ready to move on this bill as soon as we are able to get to it. I have already heard from a couple of Senators who have amendments ready to go. What we will try to do is alternate sides on amendments and hopefully finish it on Thursday. Next Friday is supposed to be a nonvoting day. We hope we can keep it that way, but this is an important piece of legislation we must complete.

This is the last vote for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute amendment, as amended, is agreed to.

TITLE II—SECOND AMENDMENT ENFORCEMENT ACT

SEC. 201. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the “Second Amendment Enforcement Act”.

SEC. 202. CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS.

Congress finds the following:

(1) The Second Amendment to the United States Constitution provides that the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed.

(2) As the Congress and the Supreme Court of the United States have recognized, the Second Amendment to the United States Constitution protects the rights of individuals, including those who are not members of a militia or engaged in military service or training, to keep and bear arms.

(3) The law-abiding citizens of the District of Columbia are deprived by local laws of handguns, rifles, and shotguns that are commonly kept by law-abiding persons throughout the United States for sporting use and for lawful defense of their persons, homes, businesses, and families.

(4) The District of Columbia has the highest per capita murder rate in the Nation, which may be attributed in part to local laws prohibiting possession of firearms by law-abiding persons who would otherwise be able to defend themselves and their loved ones in their own homes and businesses.

(5) The Federal Gun Control Act of 1968, as amended by the Firearms Owners’ Protection Act of 1986, and the Brady Handgun Violence Prevention Act of 1993, provide comprehensive Federal regulations applicable in the District of Columbia as elsewhere. In addition, existing District of Columbia criminal laws punish possession and illegal use of firearms by violent criminals and felons. Consequently, there is no need for local laws which only affect and disarm law-abiding citizens.

(6) Officials of the District of Columbia have indicated their intention to continue to unduly restrict lawful firearm possession and use by citizens of the District.

(7) Legislation is required to correct the District of Columbia’s law in order to restore the fundamental rights of its citizens under the Second Amendment to the United States Constitution and thereby enhance public safety.

SEC. 203. REFORM D.C. COUNCIL'S AUTHORITY TO RESTRICT FIREARMS.

Section 4 of the Act entitled "An Act to prohibit the killing of wild birds and wild animals in the District of Columbia", approved June 30, 1906 (34 Stat. 809; sec. 1-303.43, D.C. Official Code) is amended by adding at the end the following: "Nothing in this section or any other provision of law shall authorize, or shall be construed to permit, the Council, the Mayor, or any governmental or regulatory authority of the District of Columbia to prohibit, constructively prohibit, or unduly burden the ability of persons not prohibited from possessing firearms under Federal law from acquiring, possessing in their homes or businesses, or using for sporting, self-protection or other lawful purposes, any firearm neither prohibited by Federal law nor subject to the National Firearms Act. The District of Columbia shall not have authority to enact laws or regulations that discourage or eliminate the private ownership or use of firearms. Nothing in the previous two sentences shall be construed to prohibit the District of Columbia from regulating or prohibiting the carrying of firearms by a person, either concealed or openly, other than at the person's dwelling place, place of business, or on other land possessed by the person."
